

Editor's Note

John G. Hunter¹

Published online: 8 June 2016
© Société Internationale de Chirurgie 2016

In this issue of the World Journal of Surgery, we are publishing a study from Australia on bullying in the sphere of surgical education. Following review, I asked two surgical educators of great prominence, one male and one female to comment upon this study. Not surprisingly—at least to me—their responses were remarkably congruent yet nuanced differently. I encourage you to read the study from Australia carefully, and reflect upon the culture of your workplace, as you read the commentaries by Drs. Sarr and Numann.

✉ John G. Hunter
hunterj@ohsu.edu

¹ Department of Surgery, School of Medicine, Oregon Health and Science University, Portland, Oregon, USA