The original version of this article unfortunately contained an error. In footnote 1, the “[My 2013]” and “[My other 2013]” should be updated.

The footnote should be read as:

This idea of love as involving persistent concern with someone or something over time is developed in both “Affinity and Reason to Love” (American Catholic Philosophical Quarterly 87:1 (2013): 117–136) and “To Will One Thing” (American Philosophical Quarterly 50:2 (2013): 153–165) and owes something to Harry Frankfurt’s work on both care and love. See Frankfurt’s The Reasons of Love (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2004) for a representative example of his view.
