CONCLUDING REMARKS

Derek Crabtree

It remains for me to express gratitude. I should like to express the College's continuing debt to Macmillan, and particularly Mr Tim Farmiloe, for all their support, and also to the Vice-Chancellor and the Faculty of Social Sciences. And of course I speak for all present in expressing gratitude to our speakers and discussants for the papers and for the exemplary patience they have shown in putting up with the constraints of time and all the pressures this Seminar imposes. We who organise it do realise what a demand it is to ask of anyone and we are extremely grateful to you for rising so magnificently to it.