INTERBEHAVIORAL PHILOSOPHY

by

J.R. Kantor

The primary emphasis of this volume is to suggest a way to dispel the traditional animism which continues to underlie current philosophy and psychology. It is deplorable that the dualism of spirit and matter in philosophy and the mind-body bifurcation in psychology block the development of scientific attitudes in both disciplines. As the history of philosophy indicates, mythological attitudes engender a spurious philosophy which later forms the premise for a spiritistic psychology, which in turn is taken to be the support of transcendentalism in philosophy.

The author proposes a radical reconstruction of philosophy on a definite scientific foundation. The abolition of metaphysical conventions favors the view that philosophy consists of systems of attitudes derived only from observations of actually occurring events similar to those of established sciences.
