Clinical Neuroradiology has risen to the circle of journals with an Impact Factor. This fact is a laudable recognition of the works published in the journal over the last year, meaning that this is your success! Although the initial value of 0.604 can undoubtedly be improved upon, our journal is already in the same league with renowned journals.

Any evaluation, however, must bear in mind that the works published in 2008 could not yet be found in PubMed, making the journal relatively unknown in international terms. This is also demonstrated by the significant difference between the works cited in 2008 and those in 2009 (1:3.5!), which is unusual as normally older articles tend to be cited more frequently because they have been available for a longer period of time. If this trend continues the journal should experience a marked rise in its Impact Factor for 2011. Naturally, you can also contribute to this by checking, prior to publication of your article (irrespective of which journal) whether anything relating to the subject in question has been published in Clinical Neuroradiology in the past 2 years. If so, please cite this work! To make your search easier we have made abstracts (with keywords) of all articles from the last 2 years available on the homepage of the German Society for Neuroradiology (Deutsche Gesellschaft für Neuroradiologie, DGNR, www.neuroradiologie.de/). This will be updated regularly in the future making it a reliable source.

Obviously, citations directly affect the Impact Factor. Additionally, our journal needs your high-quality publications in order to attract a high number of citations. Thank you in advance for your support!
