RETRACTED ARTICLE: A Clock mutation enhances light-phase responsiveness to cocaine in locomotor activity and self-administration with impulsive-like responding in mice

Hongrui Meng^{1,6} · Gen Murakami¹ · Toshiko Suenaga^{1,3} · Mitsuhiro Edamura¹ · Masao Doi⁴ · Yasushi Ishida⁵ · Hitoshi Okamura⁴ · Daiichiro Nakahara^{1,2}

Received: 6 July 2015 / Accepted: 22 March 2016 / Published online: 12 April 2016
© Springer-Verlag Berlin Heidelberg 2016

RETRACTED ARTICLE: Psychopharmacology
DOI 10.1007/s00213-016-4284-z

The article “A Clock mutation enhances light-phase responsiveness to cocaine in locomotor activity and self-administration with impulsive-like responding in mice”, DOI: 10.1007/s00213-016-4284-z, and the supplementary material published online along with it in Psychopharmacology have been retracted by agreement between the authors and the journal editor, Trevor W. Robbins.

The author Dr. Hongrui Meng acted as corresponding author and submitted the article without the consent of the co-authors. Dr. Meng apologizes to his coauthors, the journal and the readers.

Electronic supplementary material The online version of this article (doi:10.1007/s00213-016-4284-z) contains supplementary material, which is available to authorized users.

✉ Hongrui Meng
menghongrui@hotmail.com

Daiichiro Nakahara
nakahara@hama-med.ac.jp

- ¹ Division of Psychology and Behavioral Neuroscience, Department of Integrated Human Sciences, Hamamatsu University School of Medicine, Hamamatsu, Japan
- ² Department of Biofunctional Imaging, Medical Photonics Center, Hamamatsu University School of Medicine, 1-20-1 Handayama, Higashi-ku, Hamamatsu 431-3192, Japan
- ³ School of Psychology, Tokyo University and Graduate School of Social Welfare, Tokyo, Japan
- ⁴ Department of System Biology, Kyoto University Graduate School of Pharmaceutical Science, Kyoto, Japan
- ⁵ Department of Psychiatry, Faculty of Medicine, University of Miyazaki, Miyazaki 889-1692, Japan
- ⁶ Research Institute for Diseases of Old Age, Juntendo University Graduate School of Medicine, Tokyo, Japan