Peer reviews are of outstanding importance for the scientific enterprise. Reviewing a manuscript properly is very time-consuming and requires a high scientific expertise and experience. We are very happy that more than 700 colleagues accepted the invitation to review one or even more articles for Marine Biology in 2015. Their comments helped the editors to decide whether an article should be published or not, supported the authors to get the article published in Marine Biology or in another journal or provided instructions to the authors, helpful for their future work.

We are very grateful for the effort of our reviewers, as we are aware that the success of Marine Biology would not be possible without their sense of obligation and their qualified comments.

We are also happy that we were able to recruit new associate editors from our best reviewers.

Marine Biology now offers reviewers the option to disclose their names on the publications. In addition, we will publish from now an annual list of all people who reviewed an article.

The list below contains the names of all colleagues who submitted their reviews in 2015. This list has been compiled with great diligence; nevertheless, we kindly ask to accept our apologies for any omissions or mistakes in the list.
