Mattias Polborn joins Amihai Glazer as co-editor of the journal. He replaces Robert Dur, to whom we are greatly indebted. We are delighted that he will continue to serve the journal as an Associate Editor.

The journal fosters research on governance in a large variety of organizations such as governments, corporations, and non-profit associations. We are interested both in questions of internal organization (including collective decision making, influence activities, rent seeking, and agency problems) and the interactions between different organizations (including federalism, conflict, problems of credibility, enforcement of international agreements, regulation, and corruption).

The journal continues to be open to many approaches, including formal theoretical analysis, systematic observation, simulation, surveys, and empirical studies. Interdisciplinary contributions by economists, organizational scholars, and political scientists are encouraged.
