I would like to take this opportunity express my appreciation for the opportunity to be the editor for the Journal of Family Violence (JOFV) for the past five years. The new editor, Rebecca Macy, is taking over the journal this year as part of the rotation. She will be handling the reviews and the editing for the journal now. Feel free to contact her with any questions. The first few issues this year will complete the articles that were submitted during the past year that we accepted.

It has been a pleasure working with all of the editorial board and reviewers of the journal during the past five years. We were able to develop an enhanced and organized system of peer reviews and editing, and to create an on-line backlog of quality articles to be published in the journal. I appreciate the efforts that many put in to make the peer review system successful, and to improve the quality of the articles we have been able to publish.

I want to acknowledge the efforts of my staff who have worked on the journal and have been largely responsible for the success we have seen. I would like to thank Jessica Mueller who has been the Senior and Managing Editorial Assistant for the past couple of years, and Sarah Robinson and Leah Dockler who have been Editorial Assistants for this process with JOFV. They have been a pleasure to work with in this endeavor. My best wishes go to the new editor as she transitions into this role.

Thank you again for all of your support. Take care.
