As we noted in Number 1 of this volume (36) of Culture, Medicine, and Psychiatry, the volume is dedicated to the life and works of medical anthropologist extraordinaire, Dr. Margaret Lock (PhD Cultural Anthropology, University of California, Berkeley, 1972), emerita Professor in the Department of Social Medicine and Department of Anthropology at McGill University in Montréal, Québec, Canada. Dr. Lock, a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada and an Officier de L'Ordre National du Québec, has most recently been awarded the McGill Medal for Exceptional Academic Achievement, one of her very many awards, the extent of which will appear in this year's last issue of CMP.

This editorial is to inform our readers that the yearlong celebration of Dr. Lock's career will conclude in the last number of this volume and will include a bibliography of Dr. Lock's book publications only. It was determined that presentation of her entire list of publications would be unwieldy, given the enormity of her body of work. We point out here, however, that her vita can be found online and that we expect soon, from the University of Toronto Press, the publication of a celebratory volume in her honor. In addition to her book length publications and honors, we will present Dr. Lock's list of what she regards as her most significant publications as well as a short essay on her view of Medical Anthropology going forward.
