Erratum to: Making Meaningful Worlds: Role-Playing Subcultures and the Autism Spectrum

Elizabeth Fein¹

Published online: 19 April 2015
© Springer Science+Business Media New York 2015

Erratum to: Cult Med Psychiatry DOI 10.1007/s11013-015-9443-x

Unfortunately, there were errors in the original publication of the article. The corrected text has been presented with this erratum.

In the section titled “Your Princess is in Another Castle: The Broader Ethnographic Study”, the second paragraph, last sentence should read as, “These stories sounded a lot like what these youth were also telling me, in our interviews and in casual conversation, about what it was like to be on the autism spectrum.” It was erroneously published as, “about what it was like to be the autism spectrum.”

In the section titled “The Need for External Structure in Autism Spectrum Conditions”, the second paragraph, line 11 should read as, “People with a locally coherent processing style have trouble making integrated wholes out of the sum of parts and coherent stories out of disconnected strings of events; they have difficulty seeing the forest for the trees.”

The online version of the original article can be found under doi:10.1007/s11013-015-9443-x.

✉ Elizabeth Fein
feine@duq.edu

¹ Department of Psychology, Duquesne University, Pittsburgh, USA