ERRATUM

Erratum to: Gossans, Slates, and the Red and Black Hamlets of Segovia (Spain): Interrelated Geological and Architectural Features

Roberto Oyarzun^{1,2} • José Francisco Martín Duque^{3,4} • José F. Barrenechea^{1,3} • José Ángel López García¹

Published online: 19 May 2017

© The European Association for Conservation of the Geological Heritage 2017

Erratum to: Geoheritage

DOI 10.1007/s12371-017-0229-0

The original version of this article unfortunately contained a mistake. Figures 4 and 5 were interchanged. The correct versions are given below.

The original article was corrected.

The online version of the original article can be found at <http://dx.doi.org/10.1007/s12371-017-0229-0>

✉ Roberto Oyarzun
oyarzun@ucm.es

¹ Departamento de Cristalografía y Mineralogía, Facultad de Ciencias Geológicas, Universidad Complutense de Madrid, 28040 Madrid, Spain

² Instituto de Geología Aplicada (IGeA), Universidad de Castilla-La Mancha, 13400 Almadén, Spain

³ Instituto de Geociencias (IGEO), CSIC-UCM, 28040 Madrid, Spain

⁴ Departamento de Geodinámica, Facultad de Ciencias Geológicas, Universidad Complutense de Madrid, 28040 Madrid, Spain

Fig. 4 Detail of a typical gullied slope (head of the gully) in the northern piedmont of the Sierra of Ayllón. The catchment has a usual amphitheater shape, with a pinnate drainage pattern; note the red-brown colors. Photo: Courtesy of Justino Diez

Fig. 5 a The Silurian “white slates” with strong advanced argillic alteration (bleached slates) and the gossan. b The paleochannel that accommodates the gossan, an erosive feature excavated in the altered slates. c The contact between the gossan and the altered slates; see also the leached oxidized stockwork and individual veins