

Erratum

In looking through the published version of our paper, "Two Models of the Urban Crisis: An Analytical Essay on Banfield and Forrester," in Policy Sciences 2/2 (1971), we have come across a few errors in some of the quotations used. The only one of any substantive significance is on page 155, where the sentence, "Thus national programs are reduced to education and improved public understanding while each particular city pursues a laissez-faire policy designed to benefit 'productive' economic forces," which we had intended to be our comment on a quotation from Jay Forrester's book, Urban Dynamics, was erroneously included within the quotation, thus appearing to be part of Forrester's statement.

We regret this error.
