It is with great sadness that we announce the passing of Robert Moteki. For many years, Bob played a central role in the administrative leadership of the Long Island Consultation Center (LICC), the premier mental health agency that founded the Journal of Contemporary Psychotherapy.

Before entering college, Bob served three years in the U.S. Army, specializing in Military Intelligence. Bob earned his BA from the University of Washington and his MSW from Hunter College. Bob joined the Long Island Consultation Center in 1967, and he served as the Administrative Director, Clinic Director, and Executive Director. He remained active with the Center for 40 years, from 1967 until 2007.

Because of his personal experiences being detained inside a military internment camp during World War II,

Bob testified before Congress on unconstitutional imprisonment. He often pursued the protection of minority rights and the importance of cultural diversity in mental health services.

With a gentle but persistent style, Bob personally recruited me to serve as editor. Over the years, he remained a valued member of the editorial board, and he offered advice and guidance without overstepping his role. He will be missed by many people throughout the field. This current issue of Journal of Contemporary Psychotherapy is dedicated to Robert Moteki for his numerous contributions to the field of mental health and to the Journal of Contemporary Psychotherapy.

James C. Overholser is editor of Journal of Contemporary Psychotherapy.
