

Editors' note

Graeme Forbes · Thomas Ede Zimmermann

Published online: 13 June 2012
© Springer Science+Business Media B.V. 2012

As our predecessor has already announced in the previous issue, Linguistics and Philosophy is returning to the tradition of having one editor for each of the disciplines it its title. Apart from spreading the workload on four shoulders, we hope that the new arrangement will help to increase the submission and acceptance rates by authors from the philosophical side of the disciplinary boundaries. In anticipation of this development, we have seen to that the positions of associate editors are (nearly) equally filled with top representatives from both fields, and have also made some concomitant changes to the editorial board. We are very grateful to all these colleagues for their willingness to join us in the editorial team and share the chores and challenges of editing a top journal!

Apart from the attempt to broaden the range of authors (and, hopefully, readership), we are not planning any major changes of editorial policy in the near future. Once we have settled in, new formats of articles and issues are likely to be installed. We will give readers advance notice of this development. So stay tuned ...

We would like to take this opportunity to thank Polly Jacobson for doing an admirable job in piloting the journal for the past 8 years and for assisting us in the process of transferring editorial responsibilities. We are also much indebted to the advisory board of the journal for bestowing the honour and challenge of editorship on us. We promise to do everything in our power to uphold the high academic standards that have made L&P one of the leading journals and most reliable sources of inspiration in the field.

---

G. Forbes
University of Colorado at Boulder, Boulder, USA
e-mail: Graeme.Forbes@Colorado.EDU

T. E. Zimmermann (✉)
Goethe-Universität Frankfurt am Main, Frankfurt am Main, Germany
e-mail: T.E.Zimmermann@lingua.uni-frankfurt.de