With the publication of this issue, our term as editors-in-chief of Linguistics and Philosophy has ended. The Executive Board is continuing the tradition of having two editors, one from each of the disciplines in the title of the journal: from 2019 onward, Regine Eckardt (Linguistics) and Dilip Ninan (Philosophy) will assume charge. We take the opportunity to thank all past and current editorial assistants and members of the Springer production team for their competent and swift support in all technical matters. And we would like to express our profound gratitude to our Associate Editors for handling hundreds of submissions and advising us on matters of editorial policy over the past years. The Associate Editors with whom we have worked are Emma Borg, Daniel Buring, John Collins, Veneeta Dayal, Paul Dekker, Regine Eckardt, the late Delia Graff Fara, Michael Glanzberg, Stefan Kaufmann, Lisa Matthewson, Peter Pagin, Paul Portner, Craige Roberts, and Malte Zimmermann. It is their time-consuming editorial work that is responsible for L&P keeping its position as the top journal in the field. We are now turning the journal over to our successors and their new team, and we are confident that standards will remain equally high.

1 Welcome by the new Editors-in-Chief

By January 2019, we succeed Thomas Ede Zimmermann and Graeme Forbes as the new Editors-in-Chief of Linguistics and Philosophy. The journal will continue to provide a platform for innovative research at the boundaries of linguistics and philosophy. Our aim is to publish work of the highest quality that contributes to exciting new developments in the field. We are grateful to Ede and Graeme for their excellent and efficient work as Editors-in-Chief. They have set high standards, which we hope to maintain. The ongoing success of Linguistics and Philosophy has always been based on the collective effort of the Editors-in-Chief, the Associate Editors, the Editorial Board members, the reviewers, and the authors. We welcome the new Associate Editors; we look forward to working with the Associate Editors who are staying on; and we warmly thank the Associate Editors who are leaving for their time, work, and intellectual input.
