

Computer-aided detection of lung nodules on multidetector row computed tomography using three-dimensional analysis of nodule candidates and their surroundings

Sumiaki Matsumoto · Yoshiharu Ohno
Hitoshi Yamagata · Daisuke Takenaka
Kazuro Sugimura

© Japan Radiological Society 2009

Erratum to: Radiat Med (2008) 26:562–569
DOI 10.1007/s11604-008-0272-5

During correction of the above mentioned article, error was inadvertently introduced.

In Abstract, Purpose should be partly revised as follows.

Purpose. We have been developing a computer-aided detection (CAD) system for lung nodules on multidetector row computed tomography (MDCT). The scheme for nodule detection in this system is featured by three-dimensional analysis of nodule candidates and their surroundings, which is designed to discriminate nodules from blood vessels. The purpose of this study was to evaluate the CAD system.

The online version of the original article can be found under doi 10.1007/s11604-008-0272-5

S. Matsumoto (✉) · Y. Ohno · D. Takenaka · K. Sugimura
Department of Radiology, Kobe University Graduate School of Medicine, 7-5-2 Kusunoki-cho, Chuo-ku, Kobe 650-0017, Japan
Tel. +81-78-382-6104; Fax +81-78-382-6129
e-mail: sumatsu@med.kobe-u.ac.jp

H. Yamagata
Research and Development Center, Toshiba Medical Systems Corporation, Otawara, Japan