The editors of Neurocritical Care acknowledge and appreciate the commitment of our editorial board members, and in particular the ad-hoc reviewers. We ask them to review papers and to suggest improvements assuming there is a good chance it will interest our readers. We unfortunately still receive a large amount of manuscripts which are not suitable for review because they simply do not involve neurocritical care in any way or form. We try not to overload reviewers with papers that do have a very low likelihood of surviving the review process. Authors should a priori appreciate that Neurocritical care is a journal of acute and emergency care of patients with acute neurologic and neurosurgical disease and this remains our mission.

Our exceptional ad hoc reviewers ensure the high standards of Neurocritical Care are met and we rely heavily on their invaluable service. Reviewers who scrutinized more than 5 papers in 2015 for possible suitability in the journal are marked with an asterisk. We thank them for the substantial amount of time devoted to the review process.

We continue to call for new reviewers and welcome any healthcare provider experienced with the care of patients with a neurocritical illness, but neuroscientists interested in review of the basic sciences are needed as well. Given the rising number of submissions we invite our academic readers to step up to the plate.
