Editorial

Manisha Chakrabarty

Published online: 23 May 2019
© Indian Institute of Management Calcutta 2019

Like every year, this year also, I am very happy to introduce our special June edition edited by our Guest Editor Prof Devi Vijay of Indian Institute of Management, Calcutta. She is an expert in the area of organisation theory. She has recently co-edited, “Alternative Organisations in India: Undoing Boundaries” (Cambridge University Press, 2017) and has published journals such as Public Management Review, Marketing Theory, and Journal of Marketing Management. She was awarded the Fulbright-Nehru Postdoctoral Research Fellowship (2016) and was a visiting fellow at the Mailman School of Public Health, Columbia University during the grant period.

This year, we bring forth a topic which is discussed everywhere ranging from board meeting to coffee table. The issue on “Changing Nature of Work” is more prudent in today’s time for decision-making process because with the advent of time and technology, nature and place of working conditions are not any more limited to longitudinal places. A shift along with structural break, sometimes with even but mostly uneven distributional patterns, is observed. Hence, in this special issue, we attempt to cross our pre-defined academic boundaries and get into those real challenges which our future generation of practitioners, academic researchers in management, policy makers need to lay emphasis on.

M. Chakrabarty (✉)
Indian Institute of Management Calcutta, Kolkata, India
e-mail: mchakrabarty@iimcal.ac.in