Notes on Contributors

Contemporary Political Theory (2012) 11, 337. doi:10.1057/cpt.2012.22

Robyn Marasco is an Assistant Professor of political theory at Hunter College, City University of New York. She is currently completing her first book manuscript, provisionally entitled The Highway of Despair: Critical Theory after Hegel. Her second major project will examine the figures of chance in modern political theory.

Mhairi Cowden is at the Research School of Social Sciences, Australian National University, and works on the application of rights theory for children. Her research interests include rights theory and discourse, public policy, bioethics and the philosophy of children. Her recent publications include 'What's Love Got to Do with It? Why Children Do not have a Right to be Loved', Critical Review of International Social and Political Philosophy (2011), dx.doi.org/10.1080/13698230.2011.572426.

Matthias Lievens is a Postdoctoral Researcher at the Leuven Centre for Global Governance Studies (K.U. Leuven, Belgium). He wrote a dissertation in philosophy on Carl Schmitt's concept of the political. His research interests include (post)Marxism, post-foundational political philosophy, democratic theory, globalisation and political ecology.