Notes on Contributors

Comparative European Politics (2005) 3, 489. doi:10.1057/palgrave.cep.6110072

Mark Blyth is an Associate Professor of Political Science at the Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. His research interests lie in the areas of Comparative Political Economy, the Politics of Ideas, and the Politics of Uncertainty. He has been a visiting professor in the UK, France, Germany and Singapore. He is the author of Great Transformations: Economic Ideas and Institutional Change in the Twentieth Century (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2002) and is currently working on three projects: A book on party politics and political economy in advanced welfare states; an edited volume on constructivist theory and political economy; and a series of papers on probability, randomness and epistemology in the social sciences. Recent articles have appeared in Comparative Politics, World Politics, Perspectives on Politics, and Western European Politics.

John Veugeliers is Associate Professor in the Department of Sociology at the University of Toronto. He received his Ph.D. from Princeton University in 1995. His research has focussed on right-wing extremism and the politics of immigration in Canada, Italy, and France. Recent publications include 'Conditions of far-right strength in contemporary Western Europe: an application of Kitschelt's theory' in European Journal of Political Research. His current research (funded by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada) examines how French right-wing extremism is connected to colonialism in Algeria.

Daniel Kinderman is a Ph.D. Candidate in the Government Department at Cornell University. He is currently working on two projects: a comparative study of the microfoundations of sectoral exchange-rate preferences and lobbying, and a dissertation on the changing institutional preferences and social responsibility orientations of European employers.

Anna van der Vleuten is Assistant Professor of International Relations and European Integration at Radboud University, Nijmegen (the Netherlands). Her research interests are: EU gender equality policies; democracy and legitimacy in regional organizations (EU, Mercosur, SADC, ASEAN). Publications include: 'De Gaulle, Moravcsik and The Choice for Europe' (with R.H. Lieshout and M. Segers), in Journal of Cold War Studies (2004); Dure vrouwen, dwarse staten. Een institutioneel-realistische visie op de totstandkoming en implementatie van Europees beleid (Dissertation, Nijmegen University Press, 2001); 'Two-level interaction as source of influence: the European Union and equal treatment policies', in B. Reinalda and B. Verbeek (ed.) Autonomous Policy Making by International Organizations (Routledge, 1998).