Notes for Contributors

Contemporary Political Theory (2005) 4, 1. doi:10.1057/palgrave.cpt.9300197

Alison Stone is a Lecturer in Philosophy at Lancaster University. She works primarily in post-Kantian European philosophy, feminist philosophy, and political philosophy. She has published articles on Luce Irigaray, Hegel's conception of nature, and feminist readings of Hegel. Her book, Petrified Intelligence: Nature in Hegel's Philosophy is published by SUNY press, 2004. She is writing a book on Irigaray's philosophy of sexual difference.

Vittorio Bufacchi is a Lecturer in Philosophy at University College Cork, Ireland. He is co-author (with Simon Burgess) of Italy Since 1989 (2001), and co-editor (with Richard Bellamy and Dario Castiglione) of Democracy and Constitutional Culture in the Union of Europe (1995). His research interests focus on the relationship between violence and social justice. He is presently working on a book-length project based on the article published here.

Robert Lee Nichols is a doctoral candidate and Pierre Elliot Trudeau Scholar in the Department of Political Science at the University of Toronto, Canada. His main research areas include political philosophy and its history, and the politics of indigenous peoples in North America. Articles on these topics can be found or are forthcoming in Journal of Contemporary History, Canadian Journal of Native Studies, and Political Theory.

Lucas Swaine is Assistant Professor and Rockefeller Scholar in the Department of Government at Dartmouth College. He is currently working on an extended project on the prospects of assuaging conflict between liberals and theocrats. He has published articles in journals such as Ethics, Journal of Political Philosophy, Ethical Theory and Moral Practice, and History of Political Thought.