Papers

Germany enters the REIT universe with a big bang

Received (in revised form): 8 June 2007

Thomas Busching

holds dual qualifications as lawyer and certified tax consultant. His practice includes taxation, tax-driven legal matters and transactional work. He advises clients in international and domestic tax structuring, inbound and outbound FDI, investment funds and REITs as well as mergers and acquisitions and corporate law. He has worked in Asia for several years and is listed as a structured finance and securitisation lawyer in Legal Media Group's Expert Guides. He is a member of the Frankfurt sections of the German Bar Association and of the German Tax Consultants Association.

Abstract

On 30 March 2007, the law allowing German real estate investment trusts or G-REITs went into effect. G-REITs are listed corporations that invest in real estate but are not subject to corporate taxes. G-REITs, however, must distribute most of their income annually. Instead of the G-REIT being subject to a corporate tax, the investor pays taxes on the dividend. With 73 per cent of companies in Germany owning real estate, the market capitalisation of G-REITs looks to grow drastically over the next few years. With perhaps half of Germany's listed companies interested in G-REITs, many may begin to take advantage of the G-REITs' flexibility in using real estate to generate funds in a tax efficient manner. As G-REITs are tax transparent, they offer investors a competitive edge over fully taxable corporations. Although these tax savings may add up to increased profits, under German law G-REITs must derive 75 per cent of their income from rental activities including property management and development. UK-REITs and G-REITs are currently competing for international investors, having been enacted around the same time. The UK market will need to know what the competition looks like. In addition, a great deal of international real estate investments within the European Union are managed and routed through London, so UK fund and real estate managers will need to familiarise themselves with the benefits of G-REITs. This paper discusses the effects tax transparency will have on G-REITs, restricted activities, effects of the listing requirement and the outlook for G-REITs.

Thomas Busching
Squire, Sanders & Dempsey L.L.P.
Taunusanlage 17
Frankfurt am Main 60325,
Germany
Tel: +49 69 17392 400
Fax: +49 69 17392 401
E-mail: tbusching@ssd.com

Keywords:

REITs, European real estate, German real estate, real estate finance

Journal of Retail and Leisure Property (2007) 6, 181–187.

doi:10.1057/palgrave.rlp.5100064

INTRODUCTION

This year, the German real estate market's New Year celebrations were postponed until 30 March, the day the long-awaited German real estate investment trusts or G-REITs finally came into effect. G-REITs are similar to international REITs with two main exceptions. The bad news is holding residential property built before 1 January 2007 is not allowed. The good news is Germany's capital gains tax of currently 40 per cent is cut in half for real property sales to G-REITs — making them very attractive buyers. Consequently, Steve Wechsler, President and CEO of NAREIT, in a recent interview on the subject gave G-REITs thumbs up and believes they are on the right track.

WHAT WILL THE MARKET LOOK LIKE?

The potential market for G-REITs is quite substantial since 73 per cent of German companies own real property — in contrast to 25 per cent of companies in the United States. For example, the 65 largest German stock corporations hold real estate valued at almost €200bn. Thus, market capitalisation projections for G-REITs range from €10bn within 2007 up to €140bn in the next three years.

A recent survey by DEGI shows that around 50 per cent of Germany's listed companies are interested in selling property to G-REITs. Sale and lease back as well as leasehold structures are explicitly allowed and the G-REITs Act does not contain any specific restrictions regarding repurchase agreements. This provides for an encouraging amount of flexibility in using real estate to generate funds for companies in a very tax efficient manner while they retain the use of the property.

WHAT IS THE GENERAL CONCEPT OF A G-REIT?

In accordance with international standards, G-REITs are structured as tax-transparent, nonregulated, listed stock corporations with mandatory real property investments as well as compulsory annual profit distributions. REITs have spread to many countries in Europe and were most recently in the United Kingdom in 2007 and France in 2003.

WHAT ARE THE GENERAL EFFECTS OF TAX TRANSPARENCY?

The main effect is that profits of G-REITs shall be taxed only at the shareholder level. The G-REIT itself shall be exempt from any profit taxes. The tax transparency of G-REITs is the main distinguishing factor setting them apart from Germany's real estate companies of today. Like any other corporate body, today's real estate companies are subject to a corporation tax of 26.375 per cent and also to a trade tax (up to 15 per cent), albeit specific exemptions for real estate companies may apply.

According to the Act, G-REITs shall only be profit tax exempt if they:

- are listed on a regulated stock exchange in the European Union (EU) or the European Economic Area, like EU plus Norway, Liechtenstein and Iceland

- comply with prescribed free float requirements, for example, long term at least 15 per cent
- hold 75 per cent of their assets in the form of domestic or foreign real property (please note that the holding of German residential property built before 1 January 2007 is disallowed)
- derive 75 per cent of their revenues from the rental, leasing and sale of real property
- distribute at least 90 per cent of their distributable income
- do not engage in real estate trading and
- meet an equity ratio of at least 45 per cent of the G-REITs immovable assets.

Should these criteria not be met, the G-REIT Act entitles the authorities to impose penalties and with the worst case being the REIT losing its tax exempt status.

Nonlisted REITs will not receive a tax exemption. This is because institutional investors are free to set up a Special Investment Fund on the basis of the German Investment Act, which also provides for tax exemption. Thus, the government does not see the need for an additional nonlisted investment vehicle such as private REITs in the United States.

Non-resident REITs investing in real estate in Germany will not get tax exempt status. An additional requirement is that the REIT is registered and has its actual place of management in Germany.

HOW DOES TAX TRANSPARENCY AFFECT G-REITS?

As outlined above, a G-REIT's real estate income is not subject to corporate or trade tax. Tax exemption at the G-REIT level shall be reversed at the level of the investor. To avoid tax leakage due to excessive deferrals, retained earnings need to be restricted and mandatory profit distributions need to be made. Thus, the G-REIT Act prescribes a mandatory annual dividend of 90 per cent of distributable profit. In this context, the definition of distributable profit is obviously critical.

The distributable profit shall be determined on the basis of German GAAP enabling G-REITs to provide for sufficient deferred maintenance expenses. Standard depreciation of buildings is restricted to the straight line method on the basis of their expected useful life. Notwithstanding, an extraordinary write-down to the fair market value is allowed in case of an expected permanent devaluation of the building.

Half of the capital gain tax on the disposal of property may be credited to a reinvestment reserve reducing the distributable profit for that specific fiscal year. This reserve will be removed at the latest by the end of the second fiscal year following the disposal. Upon reversal, the appropriate reserve must either be deducted from property acquired or built within the first or second year or allocated to the amount of distributable profit.

In order to enhance transparency regarding the fair value of the G-REIT's assets, IFRS accounts shall be drawn up with IAS 40 applied to immovable assets. The IFRS accounts shall also be basis for determining compliance with the 75 per cent thresholds in respect of real property assets and revenues mentioned above as well as the leverage and property trading limits outlined below.

To balance the effects of substantial liquidity drains caused by the mandatory distributions and in order to take advantage of low interest periods, the industry had suggested that G-REITs shall not be subject to any leverage limitations. Unfortunately, the Act prescribes an equity ratio of at least 45 per cent of the G-REIT's immovable assets.

ARE G-REIT ACTIVITIES RESTRICTED?

G-REITs are tax-privileged entities and therefore have a substantial competitive edge over fully taxable companies that could add up to 40 per cent of profits in tax savings. Thus, the privileged activities of G-REITs must be defined carefully and limited to prevent distortion in relation to unprivileged market players. As mentioned above, G-REITs must derive at least 75 per cent of their revenues from privileged activities including acquiring, holding, rental and leasing, management and the sale of its real property. Activities related to the management and development of its properties are seen as privileged including facility management, agent services, project management and development.

In this context, it is important to note that not only acquiring unrestricted ownership in real estate qualifies but also other property rights like leasehold or usufruct. This provides for considerable structuring flexibility increasing the attractiveness of G-REITs.

In contrast to the industry's wish list, property-related services provided to third parties are not privileged activities. In these areas, G-REITs would be competing with unprivileged market players. Therefore, these activities need to be limited and provided by 'Service Subsidiaries' wholly owned by the G-REIT. Service subsidiaries are fully taxable and their assets and revenues may not exceed 20 per cent of the G-REIT's assets and revenues.

It was also expected that G-REITs would be entitled to hold interests in other G-REITs. This would facilitate the establishment of umbrella REITs to hold focussed subsidiaries specialising in certain real estate sectors such as shopping centres or hotels. Unfortunately, the Act prescribes the legal form of a partnership and does not allow corporate subsidiaries. The exception being the holding of wholly owned subsidiaries owning foreign real estate and the aforementioned Service Subsidiaries. As in the case of the Service Subsidiaries, the subsidiaries holding foreign property are taxable entities.

In order to separate exempt G-REITs from taxable real estate traders, a certain holding period for the real property is prescribed. According to the Act, G-REITs shall be entitled to tax exemption only if their property sales within a period of five years are restricted to 50 per cent of the average fair value of real estate investments within this period.

WHAT ARE THE EFFECTS OF THE LISTING REQUIREMENT?

It is proposed that G-REITs must be incorporated as stock companies in accordance with all regulations of the German Stock Corporation Act (AktG). Therefore, the decision to raise capital and invest funds lies in the hands of the shareholders and management, which provides for greater flexibility in responding to market conditions.

In contrast, German real estate unit trusts are often exposed to a high influx of investor funds and corresponding investment pressure such as in 2003. The opposite case of unexpectedly high unit redemptions and liquidity drains, as some German property funds have experienced in the recent past, is certainly even more unpleasant. G-REITs in the form of stock corporations are protected from these radical swings, and this should ultimately translate into higher returns for the investor.

Notification and publication requirements of listed companies will provide more transparency for investors and have been widely welcomed. The success of REITs in Japan (J-REITs) is seen as evidence. Several authorities on the subject view the high transparency of J-REITs — which disclose not only property valuations but also vacancies, rental indexing and the like — as the main contributing factor. A high level of transparency and professionalising the industry may be the key to a positive market response to this new asset class in Germany; but in any case, there is considerable room for improvement in the transparency of the current indirect German real estate market.

G-REITs may be formed by conversion according to Germany's Conversion and Conversion Tax Act or by incorporation of a new entity. Tax exemption will only be granted from the beginning of the fiscal year in which the G-REIT is listed.

Nonlisted predecessor REITs (Pre-REITs) will be available and the listing needs to be applied within three years of the Pre-REIT registration. Pre-REITs shall have the same structure as REITs in their preparation for listing. Pre-REITs shall be taxable entities but property sales to Pre-REITs shall benefit from the same capital gains tax relief as sales to G-REITs provided the Pre-REIT will be registered as G-REIT within four years of the property purchase.

ARE THERE ANY OTHER REGULATORY REQUIREMENTS?

Just like any listed company, G-REITs shall be subject to stock exchange and capital market supervision. The supporting documentation to the Act, however, clearly determines that G-REITs shall not be regulated as open-ended investment funds or unit trusts are. Consequently, G-REITs shall not come under the purview of Germany's Investment Act or its Investment Tax Act and thus shall not be treated as unit trusts.

HOW DOES TAX TRANSPARENCY AFFECT THE INVESTOR?

As mentioned above, the G-REIT's real estate income shall be taxed only on its shareholder level. According to the Act, the distributions shall constitute dividend income fully taxable in the hands of the shareholder — whether this is a domestic corporation or individual.

With regard to non-resident investors, the Act prescribes a direct shareholding limit of less than 10 per cent enabling the German tax authorities to impose a withholding tax of effectively 10–15 per cent depending on the relevant tax treaty. Please note that higher indirect shareholdings are not restricted. The implications of a direct holding of 10 per cent are not the loss of tax exemption for the REIT or the right of dividend or voting right for the shareholder. The shareholding, however, would not qualify for participation exemption under a tax treaty reducing the withholding tax rate.

WHAT WOULD THE INVESTOR'S EXIT LOOK LIKE?

In most cases unit trust investors exit by returning their shares to the fund; however, G-REIT shareholders, as with any other shares, will sell their shares on a stock exchange. Consequently, G-REIT shareholders could be exposed to general stock exchange cycles and movements. Analyses have, however, shown that there is a limited correlation between the general market and REITs. In addition, REITs generally trade at a premium to net asset value. In contrast, the currently listed German real estate companies generally trade at a discount. Compared with German real estate unit trusts, REITs are considered more acceptable to non-German investors. The absence of an upfront fee, as in the case of unit trusts, is certainly an additional advantage. Due to their high fungibility, G-REITs shares are expected to generate demand as they reduce the risks of disinvestment, which should lead to a higher return.

WHAT ARE THE TAX CONSEQUENCES OF SELLING G-REIT SHARES?

The industry's suggestion was to exempt the capital gain from the sale of G-REIT shares. It saw this proposal to be reasonable, as the profits of a REIT have already been taxed at a shareholder level due to the high distribution quota. The Act prescribes that any capital gain shall be exempt in the hands of an individual shareholder after a holding period of one year provided the shareholding is below 1 per cent. For corporate shareholders, the capital gain shall be fully taxable whereby holding periods are irrelevant.

WHY ARE G-REITS A BENEFICIAL EXIT SCENARIO FOR GERMAN REAL ESTATE?

G-REITs were introduced not only to create a new asset class; the tax authorities also want to encourage domestic and foreign companies to realise capital gains in German real property. As an incentive, the authorities are prepared to grant tax relief for capital gains generated by the sale of real property to G-REITs or Pre-REITs as explained below.

According to the Act, only half of this capital gain shall be brought to tax thus effectively reducing the current roughly 40 per cent corporate capital gains taxation to 20 per cent. Once the current Corporate Tax Reform 2008 materialises, the tax burden would even be reduced to 15 per cent. Various conditions apply, for example, the tax benefit shall only be available within the period between 1 January 2007 and 1 January 2010 and for properties held by businesses since five years. The tax benefit is not available for businesses terminating or converting their business below fair market value and if the property is sold by the REIT within four years of acquisition.

The respective purchaser is liable if the tax benefit lapses retrospectively. On a bright side, the Act clarifies that sale and lease back structures shall be fully permissible. In addition, the tax relief shall not only be applicable for property disposals to G-REITs but also to Pre-REITs.

It should be noted that there are no plans to relieve the 3.5 per cent (4.5 in Berlin) real estate transfer tax levied on property sales. In addition, VAT implications need to be considered and structured with care — as always in the case of exempt sales with corresponding input VAT restrictions.

OUTLOOK

German market players seem to be quite enthusiastic about G-REITs. Relieving the tax burden on the disposal of real property could help companies develop more attractive balance sheets and improve their liquidity in the times of Basel II. Seldom enough, both tax authorities and businesses expect added value from G-REITS. And since win-win situations are important to success, there seems to be reason for optimism: the G-REITs legislation is effective retrospectively as from 1 January 2007.

© Squire, Sanders & Dempsey L.L.P.