Ayten Gündoğdu is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at Barnard College, Columbia University, USA. Her research interests include critical approaches to human rights, rights of non-citizens and violence in democratic politics. She is currently working on a book manuscript that draws on the work of Hannah Arendt, analysing the paradoxes of human rights in order to understand the contemporary problems of asylum-seekers, refugees and undocumented immigrants, and their struggles.

Christopher Lauer's primary research interest is the politics and ethics of recognition. His book The Suspension of Reason in Hegel and Schelling appeared with Continuum Press in 2010. He is currently at work on his second book, Intimacy: A Dialectical Study. His most recent post is Visiting Assistant Professor of Philosophy at Indiana University of Pennsylvania, USA.

Diana Coole is a Professor of Political and Social Theory at Birkbeck College, University of London. Her recent publications include Merleau-Ponty and Modern Politics after Anti-Humanism (Rowman & Littlefield, 2007) and (co-edited with Samantha Frost) The New Materialisms: Ontology, Agency, and Politics (Duke University Press, 2010). She is currently on a 3-year Leverhulme senior research fellowship, pursuing a project entitled 'Too Many Bodies? The Politics and Ethics of the World Population Question'.

Kathryn Walker is a post-doctoral research fellow at Centre Recherche Éthique Université de Montréal. Her research examines how recognition-based approach to justice illuminates issues in global and social justice.

Lida Maxwell is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Trinity College, Hartford, CT, USA. Her research interests are in contemporary democratic theory, law and politics, and modern political thought. She is currently working on a book project about political trials, which examines the complex relationship between law and politics revealed in these politico-legal events. Her reviews and review essays have appeared in Political Theory, Redescriptions and the Law and Politics Book Review.
