
Notes on Contributors

Contemporary Political Theory (2012) 11, 129. doi:10.1057/cpt.2012.2

Elisabeth Anker is an Assistant Professor of American Studies at the George Washington University. She is finishing a book titled Orgies of Feeling: Melodramatic Politics and the Pursuit of Freedom, which investigates the melodramatic narratives that shape post-9/11 politics.

Göran Duus-Otterström is a Postdoctoral Research Fellow in the Department of Political Science at the University of Gothenburg. His research interests lie in the fields of retributive and distributive justice and the free will problem. He has published articles in journals such as Law and Philosophy, Philosophy of the Social Sciences, Res Publica and Social Theory and Practice.

Mabel Wong is a Postdoctoral Fellow with the University Scholars Program at the National University of Singapore. Her research centers on questions of community and political attachment, particularly on how they relate to notions of embodiment, time, race and gender. She is currently working on a book manuscript, Belonging in the Midst of Time, which investigates the temporal foundations of community.

David Elstein is an Assistant Professor of philosophy at the State University of New York, New Paltz. His research interests focus on classical Chinese ethical and political philosophies and their contemporary adaptations and interpretations. He has recently published 'Why Early Confucianism cannot Generate Democracy' and 'Han Feizi's Thought and Republicanism' in Dao.

Stacy Clifford is a PhD Candidate in the Department of Political Science at Vanderbilt University. She is currently completing a dissertation on the role of cognitive disability within social contract theory. Her research interests include feminist theory, qualitative research methods and disability studies.