EDITORIAL

The paper by Shuttlesworth, Neill, and Ellen in this March 1984 issue of Physiological Psychology is a summary of opinions presented at a symposium at the Southeastern Psychological Association meetings last spring, 1983. I and several of my consulting editors, who reviewed the manuscript, believe the authors have raised important issues about physiological psychology and physiological psychologists that should be open for discussion. We also believe that many of us do not share the same opinions about the growth and progression of our field that are critically reviewed by Shuttlesworth et al. Nevertheless, it is my opinion that this journal, Physiological Psychology, is a natural vehicle for circulating our concerns, and I welcome the submission of manuscripts that express them.
