Editorial

This special issue on sexual differentiation and gender-related behaviors has been in the works for over a year, and reflects the considerable efforts of Jane Stewart, who has acted as the Editor for this issue. The editorial board chose this topic because of its relevance, and because Psychobiology has not attracted as many manuscripts in this area (and the general area of motivation) as we would wish. This issue should convey the commitment of our journal to all areas of psychobiology. We want to thank Jane for carrying out this task with enthusiasm, and for the quality of the finished product.

This issue closes out our third year, a year in which the submission rate was up nearly 50% from the first year. In most respects this is just what we were hoping for when we started, especially as the quality, as well as quantity, of manuscripts has increased.
