INDEX

Entries for religion, religious practice, and their constituent parts are selective on account of the fact that these subjects form the basic fabric of the book and in consequence are quite numerous. Popes, councils (ecclesiastical synods), and specific churches are listed alphabetically under those headings. Abbeys, convents, cloisters, monasteries, and priories are noted under the heading of religious houses. Medieval people are generally listed under places of origin (town or castle) and the index does not follow the common practice of listing in the place of priority first names for people born before circa 1500. Lesser known medieval figures have been identified according to their chief role in connection with the subjects under investigation. Many obscure places, churches, and persons, especially those involved in the criminal prosecution of animals or connected with the accusations and legal proceedings against Gilles de Rais have been omitted. The use of abbreviations has been avoided except in the designation of saints.
