

About the Editor

James Maclaurin is the Head of the Department of Philosophy at the University of Otago. He holds a doctorate in philosophy from the Australian National University. James has taught at the Australian National University, the University of Melbourne and Victoria University of Wellington. He has also been a Marsden Postdoctoral Fellow at Victoria University.

He is primarily a philosopher of biology, but his interests extend to philosophy of science more broadly construed, the scientific study of religion, and metaphilosophy. He has co-authored, with Kim Sterelny, What is Biodiversity? (University of Chicago Press 2008). James lives in Dunedin with his wife Kristen and son George.
