

Acknowledgments

Over the course of writing a book about the foundations of contractual obligations, that is, about the foundations of the relations between creditors and debtors, I have become indebted to the many people who have encouraged and helped me accomplish this project. I would first like to thank Horacio Spector, dean of the School of Law of the Universidad Torcuato Di Tella, my home institution, for his generous intellectual and personal support of my academic career from its very beginnings, as well as for his encouragement in writing this book. By introducing me to the field of the theoretical foundations of private law, Horacio started me down the long path that ultimately led to this book.

The project actually started as my doctoral dissertation at the Faculty of Law of the University of Toronto, a superb institution, under a Mary and Louis Anisman Fellowship in Law and Fairness in 2003–2007. At Toronto, I was immensely fortunate to work with Arthur Ripstein, my main supervisor, to whom I owe my greatest intellectual debt. I am grateful to him for his detailed and illuminating critiques. I am also grateful to Peter Benson, my co-supervisor, whose comments were crucial for developing my arguments. I am grateful to the constructive feedback of my doctoral examiners, Sophia Reibetanz Moreau, Catherine Valcke, and Seana Shiffrin (whose thorough, insightful report helped me improve the manuscript). For my work at Toronto, I was awarded the 2007 Alan Marks Medal to the Best Graduate Thesis at the Faculty of Law.

The School of Law of the Universidad Torcuato Di Tella has been the ideal working environment for the completion of this book. For their encouragement and support, I would like to specially thank my teachers, later colleagues, Guido Pincione, whose lectures made me passionate about the field of political philosophy, and Marcelo Ferrante, who has been supportive in my academic career in many important ways. I am very fortunate to teach and do research at the School of Law, and I am very proud to be a part of this institution and to work alongside my wonderful colleagues. Every day, they make me enjoy what I do.

I owe very special thanks to my friend and colleague Ezequiel Spector, with whom I spend many hours discussing about political philosophy and legal theory.

A joint paper on Nozick’s libertarianism came out of those conversations. Chapter 4 draws upon that paper.

Many friends and colleagues have been generous with their time and comments to previous drafts of different parts of this book. I would like to thank Ratna Rueban Balasubramaniam, Brian Bix, Cristian Dimitriu, Joel Colón-Ríos, Marcelo Ferrante, Matthew Lewans, Zoran Oklopcic, Charles Maxime Panaccio, Guido Pincione, Michael Pratt, Giovanni Ratti, Eduardo Rivera López, Ezequiel Spector, Horacio Spector, Esther Stern, Luciano Venezia, and Agustín Waisman. I am particularly grateful to Diego Papayannis, who made insightful comments to previous drafts of most chapters. I am also grateful to the two anonymous reviewers for Springer, who have offered constructive suggestions that helped me improve the manuscript.

I owe a special debt of gratitude to Marinka Yossiffon, who meticulously edited the manuscript and vigorously challenged me on some of my points. Needless to say, I am responsible for any mistakes that remain.

I could not have completed this book (or any other project) without the support of my friends, my family, and, especially, that of Claudia Milena. She has guided me through the last years of this project with love, understanding, and laughter. My greatest debt of all is to my parents, Celina and Jorge. They have provided constant support in all aspects of my life, including the writing of this book. I dedicate this book to them.
