At no time in history has public diplomacy played a more significant role in world affairs and international relations. As a result, global interest in public diplomacy has escalated, creating a substantial academic and professional audience for new works in the field.

This series examines theory and practice in public diplomacy from a global perspective, looking closely at public diplomacy concepts, policies, and practices in various regions of the world. The purpose is to enhance understanding of the importance of public diplomacy, to advance public diplomacy thinking, and to contribute to improved public diplomacy practices.

The editors welcome submissions from scholars and practitioners representing a range of disciplines and fields (including diplomacy, international relations, international communications, public relations, political science, global media, marketing/advertising) and offering diverse perspectives. In keeping with its global focus, the series encourages non-U.S.-centric works and comparative studies.

There are several people and institutions that we would like to thank. Byung-Kook Kim of Korea University, now serving as chairman of the Korea Foundation, has played a key role in initiating the East Asia Institute's soft-power project. Joseph Nye inspired the coeditors and participating researchers with his insights about the role of soft power in Asia at a Roundtable in Seoul in early 2008. Peter Katzenstein of Cornell University participated in the 2008 authors' conference and gave us very valuable comments and stimulating ideas. We are also grateful for the helpful suggestions and ideas that we received from an anonymous reviewer. In preparing the manuscript for submission, we wish to thank Stephen Ranger at the East Asia Institute and Rebecca Solheim for their tireless work and support. Ruben van Genderen has been very helpful in compiling the index. Farideh Koochi-Kamali and Robyn Curtis at Palgrave Macmillan have worked at great speed and we are also grateful to series editors Kathy Fitzpatrick and Phil Seib, who have been very encouraging. Finally, this book could not have been published without the generous support of the Korea Foundation. The foundation supported the EAI-CCGA's cross-national survey, the conference in 2008, and this book's publication costs.
