Notes on the Contributors

Jane Batchelor is Senior Lecturer in Social Work at the University of Bath. She is a qualified social worker with a long-standing interest in stepfamily issues. She was a founder member of the National Stepfamily Association and in 1994 co-authored Understanding Families with Donna Smith and Brian Dimmock.

Margaret Bell is Senior Lecturer in Social Work and Director of Graduate Social Work Research Studies at the University of York. She is author of the book, Child Protection: Families and the Conference Process, and her teaching and research interests are in child care and protection, multidisciplinary work, domestic violence and looked-after children. She has worked as a senior social worker in the health field, more recently as a children's guardian.

Arnon Bentovim is a child and family psychiatrist. He also trained as a psychoanalyst and a family therapist. He worked at the Great Ormond Street Children's Hospital in London and the Tavistock Clinic in London for many years until 1994, when he founded the London Child and Family Consultation Service. Here he introduced a family approach to child mental health problems, researching and developing approaches to assessment and therapeutic work.

Liza Bingley Miller is a social worker now working independently and is involved with a number of projects including Making Research Count (University of York), the Attachment Research Group, the PQ in Child Care and the Systems-Centred Therapy Training Programme at the University of York. She is Chair of the City of York Adoption and Permanency Panel and a UKCP-registered family therapist.

Christopher Clulow is Director of the Tavistock Marital Studies Institute, where he works as a senior couple psychotherapist, teacher and researcher. He has directed action research projects on the transitions to parenthood and out of marriage, and published extensively on marriage and couple work for professional and lay readers.

Brid Featherstone is the NSPCC Reader in Applied Childhood Studies at the University of Huddersfield and is a qualified social worker. She has published in the areas of gender relations and child welfare. She is currently writing a book on Family Life and Family Support: A Feminist Analysis to be published by Palgrave in 2003.

Nick Frost is Senior Lecturer in Continuing Education at the University of Leeds. He has been a social worker, project leader and a policy officer in a number of social services settings. He is also active in the voluntary child-care sector. He has published extensively in the fields of child welfare, family support and continuing professional education.

Dorothy Heard is a psychoanalytic psychotherapist in private practice and Honorary Research Fellow in the Department of Psychology at the University of Leeds. She trained under John Bowlby as a child psychiatrist at the Tavistock Clinic in London, where she worked with parents of disturbed children and developed Bowlby's attachment theory. She has a number of publications in the fields of immunohaematology and psychotherapy and in the development of attachment theory, including The Challenge of Attachment for Caregiving in collaboration with Brian Lake.

Dorota Iwaniec is Professor of Social Work and Director of the Institute of Child Care Research at Queen's University Belfast. Her main research interests are in neglect, emotional abuse, behaviour management, and the whole area of parenting including parent training. She has been involved in research for over 25 years and has finished a 20-year follow-up study on 'children who fail to thrive'. She has published extensively in the area of child care.

Una McCluskey is Senior Lecturer in Social Work and Director of the group psychotherapy programme at the University of York. Her practice, research and publications focus on the dynamics of interaction between couples, families and groups. She has been involved in the York University Attachment Research Group since the 1980s and is currently looking at the dynamics of attachment as they manifest in group interaction.

Stephanie Petrie is Lecturer in Social Work at the University of Liverpool. She has worked as a social worker and manager in the statutory and independent sectors. Her research interests lie in examining the impact of mixed-economy welfare policies, funding and structures on services for children and their families. She is currently involved in a Department of Health funded research project into teen pregnancy.

Ian Sinclair worked in the steel industry, probation, the Home Office research unit, social work and counselling before becoming Director of Research at the National Institute of Social Work. He moved from there to be Professor of Social Work at the University of York, where he is currently co-director of the Social Work Research and Development Unit.

Christine Skinner is Lecturer in Social Policy at the University of York. Her recent research has explored how parents coordinate childcare with employment commitments and she is currently writing a report for the Joseph Rowntree Foundation. She is interested in all aspects of policy relating to families with children including social security benefits and tax credits, welfare to work agenda, and parental obligations following relationship breakdown.

Christopher Vincent is a senior couple psychotherapist and clinical lecturer in marital studies at the Tavistock Marital Studies Institute, where he coordinates the Institute's research and publications activities. His clinical and research interests have focused on work with individuals and couples who are separating or divorcing, and he currently is part of the research team looking at the relationship between attachment patterns and couples' conflict management tactics.

Kate Wilson is Professor of Social Work at Nottingham University, where she directs the Centre for Social Work. She has published widely in the field of child welfare and therapeutic work with children and adults. Her books include two jointly authored books Play Therapy, and an edited second edition (with Adrian James) of The Child Protection Handbook. She has worked as a probation officer, social worker and as a mediator and counsellor.
