In the first place, my thanks go to those people whose assistance proved especially valuable when it came to collecting research materials for this book. They are Martin Durham, Monty Kolsky at the Board of Deputies of British Jews, Mike Hartman from the Tyne and Wear Anti-Fascist Association, Graham Macklin, Paul Meszaros from Bradford Trades Council, and Christine Woodland, Archivist at the University of Warwick's Modern Records Centre. My thanks also go to an anonymous source for granting me access to his private research collection and to Michael Newland for answering my queries. David Renton commented on parts of the original manuscript and Graham Macklin on the revised version. I am grateful to both for their suggestions and advice. For permission to re-use material from prior publications, I acknowledge the Political Studies Association, Blackwell, and Taylor and Francis (Routledge). As always, I owe a special thanks to Ali and my family for their encouragement and forbearance.
