Acknowledgements

There are a number of organisations and individuals that contributed to the development of this book. One of the most obvious of these is the Leverhulme Trust whose grant allowed the fieldwork for the research. We are particularly grateful for this support. We would also like to thank Paul Reynolds who was insistent that we included new businesses from outside of Teesside, so as to make additional and valid comparisons.

A great deal of thanks must also go to the individual entrepreneurs on whose interviews this research is based. Equally valuable were the research team involved in conducting the interviews. People of particular importance here were John Anderson, Bridget Reah and Kevin Amess. Much of the secondary research for this book was collected at the following libraries: the Bodelian Library, the British Library, Middlesbrough Central Reference Library, Teesside University Library, and Durham University Library. We are grateful for the support provided by each of these organisations.

Particular thanks must also go to Swinburne University in Melbourne Australia who provided Francis Greene space and time to allow the bulk of the book to be written. Finally, we are also extremely grateful to Macmillan and Jacky Kippenberger who saw the potential of a book that looked at the historical and spatial dimensions of entrepreneurship. As usual, any omissions or errors are down to us.
