Palgrave Macmillan Memory Studies

Series Editors: Andrew Hoskins and John Sutton

The nascent field of Memory Studies emerges from contemporary trends that include a shift from concern with historical knowledge of events to that of memory, from “what we know” to “how we remember it”; changes in generational memory; the rapid advance of technologies of memory; panics over declining powers of memory, which mirror our fascination with the possibilities of memory enhancement; and the development of trauma narratives in reshaping the past.

These factors have contributed to an intensification of public discourses on our past over the last 30 years. Technological, political, interpersonal, social and cultural shifts affect what, how and why people and societies remember and forget. This groundbreaking series tackles questions such as: What is “memory” under these conditions? What are its prospects, and also the prospects for its interdisciplinary and systematic study? What are the conceptual, theoretical and methodological tools for its investigation and illumination?

Acknowledgments

This volume grows out of the international conference Curating Difficult Knowledge held at Concordia University and co-sponsored by the Université de Montréal on April 16–18, 2009. We gratefully acknowledge the support for this event and the subsequent volume from the Social Science and Humanities Research Council of Canada, the Canada Research Chairs program, the Université de Montréal Faculty of Arts and Science, and the Concordia University Vice President for Research and Graduate Studies. We also thank all the conference participants for their enthusiasm and thoughtful contributions to the discussion out of which this volume developed. We are especially indebted to Shelley Butler, Anna Sheftel, the CEREV Post-conflict Studies reading group, and Palgrave Macmillan's anonymous reviewer for thoughtful comments on earlier drafts. Thanks as well to Mark Beauchamp, Felicity Plester, and Catherine Mitchell for helping us with the finer details necessary to bring this volume to print. As the chapters provide fine-grained discussion of curatorial practices, an art section displays the works of many artists and institutions, whom we wish to acknowledge for their gracious permission to include reproductions of their work: Jane Alexander, Mirosław Bieniecki, Igor Grubić, James Mader, Dalibor Martinis, Judith Mason, Lika Mutal, Sam Nhlengethwa, Yael Rojas, Sue Williamson, Jim Crow Museum of Racist Memorabilia, District Six Museum, Kiptown Museum, Iziko Museums, Wits Art Museum, Legacy of Hope Foundation, Museum of Contemporary Art in Zagreb, Migration Museum of Southern Australia, and Sarajevo Center for Contemporary Art.

Notes on Contributors

Andrew Herscher teaches at the University of Michigan in the Taubman College of Architecture and Urban Planning and the Departments of Slavic Languages and Literatures and Art History. He is author of Violence Taking Place: The Architecture of the Kosovo Conflict (Stanford University Press, 2010).

Heather Igloliorte is an Inuk curator and art historian from the Nunatsiavut Territory of Labrador currently completing doctoral studies at Carleton University. Her research examines the exhibition of Inuit and other global indigenous arts and cultures in relation to mid-twentieth-century modernist primitivism and contemporary critical museology. She is the curator of the Legacy of Hope Foundation exhibition featured in her chapter in this volume.

Erica Lehrer is an assistant professor in History and Anthropology-Sociology at Concordia University in Montreal, where she also holds the Canada Research Chair in Post-Conflict Studies. She is author of the forthcoming Revisiting Jewish Poland: Tourism, Memory, Reconciliation (Indiana University Press, 2012), and has undertaken experimental curatorial work on Jewish heritage and memory in contemporary Poland.

Cynthia E. Milton holds the Canada Research Chair in Latin American history and is Associate Professor in the Département d'histoire at the Université de Montréal. She is author of The Many Meanings of Poverty: Colonialism, Social Compacts, and Assistance in Eighteenth-Century Ecuador (Stanford: Stanford University Press, 2007), co-editor of The Art of Truth-Telling about Authoritarian Rule (Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 2005), and is presently working on the edited volume The Art(s) of Truth-telling in Post-Shining Path Peru.

Erin Mosely is a PhD candidate in African Studies and History at Harvard University. Her research explores the political and social roles of artists in the wake of prolonged conflict and war. Particular interests include transitional justice, truth commissions, collective memory and memorialization practices, and post-conflict visual culture.

Darren Newbury is a professor of photography at Birmingham City University. He has published widely on photography and photographic education. His book Defiant Images: Photography and Apartheid South Africa (UNISA, 2009) is a study of photography during the apartheid period and its role in commemoration and historical representation in post-apartheid South Africa.

Śławomir Kapralski is a faculty member at the Warsaw School of Social Sciences and Humanities. He has published on the subjects of social and cultural theory; nationalism, ethnicity, and identity; time, space, and collective memory; anti-Semitism; representations of the Holocaust and Polish-Jewish relations; and Roma communities of Central and Eastern Europe.

Tamar Katriel is a professor in the Department of Communications at Haifa University. She has published extensively on a range of topics related to contemporary Israeli culture and patterns of communication. Her present research looks at counter-discourses produced and circulated by dissident groups of feminists and former IDF soldiers in campaigns protesting their government's policies and practices in the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

Monica Eileen Patterson is a postdoctoral fellow in the History Departments at Concordia University and the Université de Montréal. Her teaching and research interests include colonial and postcolonial southern Africa, anthropology and history, childhood, violence, memory, and public scholarship. She is co-editor of Anthrohistory: Unsettling Knowledge, Questioning Discipline (University of Michigan, 2011).

Roger Simon is Professor Emeritus at the University of Toronto. His research has addressed the pedagogical and ethical dimensions of practices of cultural memory particularly as this applies to the remembrance of mass systemic violence. His work has explored the intersections of social and political theory, cultural practice, and pedagogy.

Amy Sodaro is a PhD candidate in sociology at the New School for Social Research. Her research focuses on the use of memorials and museums as mechanisms for coming to terms with past conflict, violence, and atrocity. She is co-editor of Memory and the Future: Transnational Politics, Ethics and Society (Palgrave Macmillan, 2010).

Viv Szekeres holds an Honours degree in History, a BA in Education, and a diploma in Montessori Teaching. She has worked at the South Australian Migration Museum for more than twenty years and was Director from 1987 to 2009. She has published several articles on issues of diversity and representation in Australian Museums.
