Acknowledgements

I wish to acknowledge all those who participated in two working conferences held at the Maxwell School's Moynihan Institute of Global Affairs, where the ideas for this volume were first aired and debated. In addition to those who contributed final chapters, the active involvement of the following individuals is most appreciated: Kristi Andersen, Arthur Brooks, Goody Cooke, Michael Freedman, John Mathiason, Susan Pozo, David Richardson, Larry Schroeder, Margaret Sherraden, Bartosz Stanislawski, and John Western. David Richardson provided a fountain of constructive criticism and advice from the very beginning of the project. Lidia Villalba Van-Dijk provided important organizational assistance early on as did Daniel Cornish in the final stages of review. Sincere thanks are extended to Matthew Dippold and Linda Jirouskova for outstanding research assistance along the way.

I also wish to thank the Moynihan Institute of Global Affairs for its generous financial support. The director of the Moynihan Institute, Peg Hermann, deserves special credit for her steadfast intellectual and moral support throughout. Tim Shaw's enthusiastic backing of the project proved invaluable from the very inception of the publication process.

Finally, this project would not have reached fruition without the intellectual vigor, contagious enthusiasm, and valued friendship of our late Maxwell colleague Michael Freedman, in whose memory we dedicate this volume.

Contributors

Steven R. Brechin is Professor of Sociology in the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs of Syracuse University, USA. He researches organizations engaged in nature protection around the world as well as public attitudes, values, and knowledge about the environment, including climate change. Current research in Belize investigates formal and informal civil society–government relationships dedicated to conservation action programs. Brechin received his PhD from the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, in 1989 and has held faculty appointments at Princeton University, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, and the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign.

Stuart S. Brown is Professor of International Relations and Director of Master's of Economics Program at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs of Syracuse University, USA. He is a senior research associate of Maxwell's Moynihan Institute and directs the institute's Transnational Mobility project. Brown specializes in international macroeconomics and emerging markets and has published widely on the transition economies of Eastern Europe. In addition to prior academic positions at Smith College and Georgetown University, he served as a desk economist in the European Department of the International Monetary Fund (1993–1995) and as a chief economist for Eastern Europe, Africa, and the Middle East at BNP-Paribas and Bank of America (1995–2002). He is the founding director of the Pew Economic Freedom Fellow's Program, a pioneering training program for emerging market leaders.

Katrina Burgess is Associate Professor of International Political Economy at the Fletcher School at Tufts University and Adjunct Associate Professor of Research at the Watson Institute of Brown University, USA. She has also taught at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs of Syracuse University, UCLA, and the Autonomous Technological Institute of Mexico (ITAM). She has a B.A. in Political Science from Swarthmore College, a master's in International Relations from the University of Southern California, and a doctorate in Politics from Princeton University.

Bruce W. Dayton is Associate Director of the Moynihan Institute of Global Affairs at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs of Syracuse University, USA. He researches and teaches in the fields of conflict analysis and resolution and crisis management and is interested in the work of intermediaries in conflict resolution and in understanding and modeling leadership decision-making in times of crisis. His recent book is Conflict Transformation and Peacebuilding: Moving from Violence to Sustainable Peace, which he coedited with Louis Kriesberg. He has also published articles in the International Studies Review, the Journal of Contingencies and Crisis Management, and the Oxford Encyclopedia of Peace.

Renée de Nevers is Assistant Professor in Public Administration at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs of Syracuse University, USA. Previously, she has taught at the University of Oklahoma, and was a Program Officer at the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation. She was a research fellow at the Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs, the Center for International Security and Cooperation and the Hoover Institution at Stanford University, and the International Institute for Strategic Studies. She received her doctorate from Columbia University. Her research interest is in international security, with a current focus on sovereignty and the war on terror. She is the author of Comrades No More: The Seeds of Change in Eastern Europe.

Margaret G. Hermann is Gerald B. and Daphna Cramer Professor of Global Affairs and Director of the Moynihan Institute of Global Affairs of Syracuse University, USA. Her research focuses on political leadership, foreign policy decision-making, the comparative study of foreign policy, and crisis management. Hermann has developed techniques for assessing the leadership styles of heads of government at a distance and currently has such data on more than 250 world leaders. She has been president of the International Society of Political Psychology (ISPP) and the International Studies Association (ISA), as well as editor of the journals Political Psychology and the International Studies Review. Her books include The Psychological Examination of Political Leaders; Describing Foreign Policy Behavior; Political Psychology: Issues and Problems; and Leaders, Groups, and Coalitions: Understanding the People and Processes in Foreign Policymaking. Over 100 of her articles have appeared in the Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, the Journal of Conflict Resolution, the International Studies Quarterly, and the American Political Science Review. Hermann received her doctorate in Psychology from Northwestern University.

Ana Jamborcic works in the private sector as a business analyst for an energy efficiency company in Cambridge, MA, USA. While earning her degree at the Environmental Science and Forestry College of the State University of New York, USA, she worked on a research grant through the National Science Foundation in conjunction with the Maxwell School Department of Sociology of Syracuse University, USA, to research nonprofit conservation organizations and indigenous issues in Brazil. Jamboric is involved with the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development Education Caucus and is a passionate environmentalist with a sustainability mission and vision. Her current interests pivot at the nexus of organizational theory, sustainability, and sociology.

Suprita Kudesia graduated from the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs of Syracuse University, USA, with a master's in International Relations. Since then, she has worked at Population Services International (PSI), a leading global health organization with programs targeting malaria, child survival, HIV, reproductive health and non-communicable disease. She currently leads capacity-building and operations efforts in the Grants & Contracts Department at PSI and loves that her job allows her to interact with PSI's country platforms in training and knowledge management. She has previously interned at a small human rights NGO in Ethiopia training social workers on adult learning principles and building training curricula.

John McPeak is Associate Professor in the Department of Public Administration in the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs of Syracuse University, USA. He teaches microeconomics and development economics at the graduate level. He received his master's and doctorate from the University of Wisconsin-Madison, conducting fieldwork in northern Kenya that served as the basis for his dissertation. After receiving his doctorate, he took a postdoctoral research associate position with Cornell University assigned to work in Kenya with the USAID/GL-CRSP funded Pastoral Risk Management Project. After three years of fieldwork with this project he joined the faculty of Syracuse University (SU) in 2002. He has continued to conduct research in Kenya, Ethiopia, and Mali since arriving at SU.

Deborah Pellow is Professor of Anthropology at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs of Syracuse University, USA, whose research focuses on cultural and subcultural groups living in urban areas of plural society under conditions of social change. Her primary geographic area of interest is West Africa, particularly Ghana and northern Nigeria. Pellow has also done research in Shanghai, China, while a visiting professor of history at Fudan University, and in Osaka and Kyoto, Japan, while a Fulbright lecturer. She is Director of the Maxwell program “Integrated Studies in Space and Place” which explores how status, politics, social relations, and cultural meanings are expressed through people’s creation and use of physical space. Pellow is the author of four books and numerous articles. She earned her doctorate from Northwestern University in 1974.

Robert A. Rubinstein is Professor of Anthropology and International Relations at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs of Syracuse University, USA, where he, between 1994 and 2005, directed the Program on the Analysis and Resolution of Conflicts. He received his doctorate in Anthropology from SUNY Binghamton, and a MsPH from the School of Public Health of the University of Illinois at Chicago. He has published over 100 journal articles and book chapters, and has authored or edited nine books, including Peacekeeping under Fire: Culture and Intervention. The American Anthropological Association awarded him the 2010 Robert B. Textor and Family Prize for Excellence in Anticipatory Anthropology, and in 2000, Binghamton University gave him the Edward Weisband Distinguished Alumni Award for Public Service or Contributions to Public Affairs.

Bandita Sijapati is Adjunct Professor at Nepa School of Social Sciences and Humanities, Nepal. She completed her doctorate from the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs of Syracuse University, USA. Her research interests include migration, transnationalism, citizenship, political psychology, research methodology, and civil conflicts. She holds a master’s from Columbia University and a B.A. from Macalester College, Minnesota. Her most recent publications include “Nepali Transmigrants: An Examination of Transnational Ties among Nepali Immigrants in the United States,” European Bulletin of Himalayan Research, (2010); “Public Discourse and Action to Address Madhesi Exclusion” (forthcoming); and “Public Discourse and Action to Address Muslim Exclusion” (forthcoming). She is also the coauthor of A Kingdom under Siege: Nepal’s Maoist Insurgency, 1996–2004 and has presented papers at a number of venues, including Cornell University, Columbia University, City University of New York, The New School for Social Research and CNRS.

Beatriz Tinajero is currently working on the development of business models that can have a relevant social impact through the incorporation of small producers in their supply chain, focusing on the hotel industry as a starting point. She has worked in the advisory team on foreign affairs to the President of Mexico, Felipe Calderón, focusing on Mexican relations with North America and Latin America. She received her master's in Law and Diplomacy at the Fletcher School in Tufts University, focusing on development economics and migration. She received her B.A. in International Relations at the Instituto Tecnológico Autónomo de México, where she also taught International Relations after graduation. She has also done field research on the phenomenon of migration in Zacatecas and El Salvador.

Hongying Wang is Associate Professor of Political Science at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs of Syracuse University, USA, specializing in China and East Asia. Her teaching and research interests include comparative politics and international relations, particularly Chinese and East Asian politics. Wang is the author of Weak State, Strong Networks: The Institutional Dynamics of Foreign Direct Investment in China. Her articles on Chinese political economy, Chinese foreign policy, and globalization have been published in Asian Perspective, Asian Survey, The Pacific Review, Global Governance, The China Quarterly, and various edited volumes. She is engaged in research projects on the external sources of institutional change in China and on China's participation in global governance.
