Acknowledgments

This book is an updated and greatly extended continuation of the PhD dissertation I began at Bar Ilan University in 2001. I wish to thank the university for awarding me the Presidential Scholarship for Outstanding Doctoral Students and for employing me thereafter. I wish to express my gratitude and affection for Professor Ellen Spolsky, advisor, mentor, friend, and inspiration, founding god-mother of the discipline now termed “cognitive approaches to literature,” for her challenging, rigorous, and ever-ready attentiveness. I thank my many marvellous teachers: Jean Gooder, Sue Manning, Germaine Greer, Stephan Collini, Caroline Walmsley, Graham Banks, Tim Williams, Ruth Whiting, Graham Noble, Colin Prowse, Dennis Archer, Alan Gent, Kinereth Mayer; and my fierce and discerning editors Vera Glasberg, Jerome Mandel and John Lutterbie. Special thanks to Bruce McConachie, who expressed faith in this project in its infancy and secured a home for its publication. To Iris Dahan, who taught me how to listen for embodied signals. To Samantha Hasey and Joel Breuklander from Palgrave Macmillan. To Rohini Krishnan from Newgen Publishing and Data Services. To Elizabeth Hart, Lisa Zunshine, Alan Richardson, Amy Cook and Rhonda Blair, among other literary scholars committed to this interdisciplinary venture, who have paved the academic road for this book.

To my wise and wonderful mother, Jacqueline Rokotnitz; to my talented brother, Jonathan Rokotnitz, who also contributed the evocative cover illustration; to my sparkle-eyed children, Daniel and Lia; and in memory of my beloved father, Herbert.

To John Keats for his invitation to “burst joy’s grape against [our] palate[s] fine.”
