Palgrave Studies in Screenwriting is the first book series to focus on the academic study of screenwriting. It seeks to promote an informed and critical account of screenwriting and of the screenplay, looking at the connections between what is produced and how it is produced, with a view to understanding more about the diversity of screenwriting practice and its texts. The scope of the series encompasses a range of study from the creation and recording of the screen idea, to the processes of production, to the structures that form and inform those processes, to the agents, their beliefs and the discourses that create those texts.

My gratitude is huge, my thanks inadequate. I thank everyone who has helped me, especially if I have somehow, humiliatingly, left you off this page. In no particular order . . .

The Emmerdale team at ITV Yorkshire, for their long-term good humour and patience. Tony Hammond spent much time answering my banal questions, Estelle Hind an equal time dealing with my banal requests. Steve November, Stuart Blackburn, John Whiston, Kieran Roberts, Kirsten Holly and the writers, storyliners, script editors and others who must remain anonymous, all deserve thanks and huge respect. Many thanks to ITV Studios for permission to use the illustrations in Figures 5.2, 5.3, 5.4 and 5.5.

I owe debts of gratitude, pints, probably money to: Charles Barr, Carolyne Bevan (BFI), Richard Brown, Matthias Brutsch, Bryony Dixon (BFI), Patrick Fahy (BFI), Adam Ganz, Noelle Janaczewska, Henry Miller, Nathalie Morris (BFI), J. J. Murphy, Tom Pevsner, Steven Price, Petr Szczepanik, Claus Tieber, Gerry Turvey, Paul Wells and Anna Zoellner. Many thanks to Ben Bolt for allowing me to use the illustration in Figure 9.1 and to A. A. Reeves for allowing me to quote extensively from David Lean's papers. Thanks to Greg Geoghegan of Sydney for sharing his amazing genealogical research into the Stannard family, and to Chris Thompson for sharing his extensive experience on Emmerdale. Thanks to Kirsi Rinne and all my colleagues in the Screenwriting Research Network (www.screenwritingresearch.com) for their support; to my department, the Institute of Communications Studies, for sufficient research leave to undertake this, and to Nathalie Henry for taking over my day job. Appreciative thanks to Dan Bush of Albany, MO, for permission to use his stunning photo for the cover. Thanks to Felicity Plester and Chris Penfold of Palgrave Macmillan, for their patience and forbearance under pressured circumstances for all concerned; and thanks also to Francis Arumugam and colleagues from Integra, for their detailed hard work in a decidedly short time! Thanks to Steven Maras for his last-minute good advice, and much gratitude to Kathryn Millard for her solid support and good sense over the long haul.

Thanks to Soraya Viloría Montes de Oca and Rory Macdonald for their translation work, and to Dr. Sheila Macdonald for her advice. Thank you to the Townends of St. Albans for their hospitality and for posting back my flannel. My apologies to Keith and Kate Townend for missing too many visits. Thanks to Lydia for being so enthusiastic about this book (and for not making too much noise), and thanks to Polly for the nice drawings and for waiting nicely for me to finish this before she got her new bedroom. Deep thanks to, and in memory of, my mother and father, Helen and Walter Macdonald, who gave me so much, and – most of all – enormous love and thanks to Nicola, who has worked harder than me to make this succeed. Stars, every one of you.
