This study is an outcome of several research projects carried out at the Department of Political Science and International Relations and at the Tampere Peace Research Center (TAPRI) within the University of Tampere. The main sources of funding have been three research projects sponsored by the Academy of Finland, namely: “Regionalism and globalism in Southeast Asia”, “Regionalism, globalism and the development of the inter-state system in Southeast Asia” and “The Regional and local policy impacts of the global environmental and climate regimes”. The initiative for the research originated in 1996 from the Finnish Ministry for Foreign Affairs, which made it possible to start the project and supported it during the entire research period. A senior fellowship at TAPRI enabled me to finalise this book.

Owing to these three projects, several persons have inspired the ideas for my study. Inevitably, the book includes thoughts and views of my colleagues in our Southeast Asia project: Annamari Antikainen-Kokko, Janne Jokinen, Anisa Doty and Teemu Tuominen. Although the project was sometimes difficult to administer, the effort as such was stimulating, operating among three universities (Universities of Tampere, Turku and Abo Akademi University) and three departments. In addition, with the particular support of the Foreign Ministry, it differed from more conventional academic research projects. Indeed, the interests and support of the Foreign Ministry staff for our network were very important. Hannu Mäntyvaara and Mikko Jokela flexibly connected the need for policy information to academic interests and Paula Parviainen and Markku Heiskanen, among many other officials at the Foreign Ministry, gave an important practical policy perspective on Southeast Asian affairs.

The research project included three research trips to Southeast Asia. I am indebted to several colleagues and friends in Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand for their hospitality and help. Here I would also like to thank: Miriam Coronel Ferrer, Derek da Cunha, Jalil Miswardi and Hong Chee, Suthiphand Chirathivat, Yupin Chancharoensin and Yeo Lay Hwee. I would particularly like to mention the help of librarians at the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies in Singapore, at the library of Chulalongkorn University in Bangkok and at the Institute of Strategic and International Studies in Kuala Lumpur.

I have also received important practical help in my research. Riitta Lehtimäki at the Department of Political Science and International Relations has patiently administrated my projects and Erja Yläjärvi collected material on the Asian economic crisis. Joan Lofgren, Virginia Mattila and Tina Parke-Sutherland did a lot of work in editing my English. Finally, Marita Alanko professionally prepared the manuscript for the publisher.

To carry out an academic research project is often a stressful job of combining intellectual intentions and financial realities. I am thankful to my wife, Sirkku, for understanding this insecurity. I am also very much obliged to my colleagues at the Department of Political Science for their support: Pertti Lappalainen, Juha Holma, Tarja Seppä, Tapani Turkka and Pekka Virtanen, from whom, I am afraid, I have got more than I have given.

A part of the material presented in this book has appeared in other publications. The earlier version of the first chapter, "Integration and Fragmentation in Southeast Asian Regionalist Discourse", was published previously in a Special Issue of the Journal of the Finnish Anthropological Society, Volume 25 No. 2 (June 2000), pp. 76–88 and a shorter version of Chapter Five has appeared as "EU-ASEAN Relations: Reconciling Two Different Agendas" in Contemporary Southeast Asia, Volume 19, No. 3, December 1997, pp. 269–285. Reproduced here with the kind permission of the publisher, Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, Singapore.
