Acknowledgments

This book grew out of a class I have taught at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C. for the past four years; and the Georgetown course brought together much from my professional and academic careers. This book, therefore, contains a lot of wisdom picked up from a lot of people over many years. I am grateful to people too numerous to name. I will to do so anyway.

Three energy sources propelled me through this project: a loving family; mentors who showed me the world of economic science, the ways of statecraft, and the inner workings of Washington, D.C. and the good people of Palgrave Macmillan. My family inspired each page. They allowed me to get up early on weekends and go off to write for a few hours. And they believed in me every step of the way. My colleagues in policy, operations, and academia allowed me a seat at the table through the years and stretched my thinking. And Palgrave Macmillan unleashed the opportunity to write, encouraging me to bridge these professional and academic worlds with this book. When encouraged to begin this manuscript by Amanda Hamilton at Palgrave Macmillan, I sucked air through my teeth and thought it couldn't be done. Amanda's energy and encouragement proved vital and I am grateful for her support.

Sincere thanks to the following for their scholarship, votes of confidence and intellectual capital: W. Mark Crain, Senator Connie Mack, Kurt Campbell, Joe Nye, Walt Doran, Carlos Ramirez, Todd Zywicki, Roger Congleton, Walter Williams, David Levy, Larry Iannaccone, Gordon Tullock, Tyler Cowen, Bob Mottice, Ron Wintrobe, Kurt Schuler, Bob Stein, Juan Zarate, Chip Poncy, Jim Jochum, Patrick Cronin and Robert Stein, Jaime Suchlich and the Institute for Cuban and Cuban-American studies at the University of Miami. William Trumbull and participants in the fall 2002 Seminar Series at West Virginia University. Members of the Association for the Study of the Cuban Economy and participants in the 2002 ASCE annual meeting. My students at Georgetown University, including Elena Schwieger and Porter Delaney for their help in putting together this book. Vivian Ravdin, Ellen Piazza, and Brian Summers for editorial assistance. All errors, of course, are my own.
