Acknowledgements

My primary debt of gratitude belongs to John Holmes, without whose intellectual involvement and ongoing support this project would not have been possible. A more generous colleague and friend it would be impossible to find. Thanks also to Jo and Amy, for sustenance of all kinds during a research trip to Oxford in the English winter of 2005/2006.

Thanks are due to other colleagues: Brenda Cooper was a willing and helpful reader of the initial chapter, and an important source of encouragement. Goran Stanivukovic kindly read the entire manuscript and made useful comments. Elisa Galgut provided an alternative view on psychoanalysis's use of gender. I am grateful to Evelyn Gajowski for her support.

Thanks also to Paula Kennedy and Christabel Scaife at Palgrave Macmillan, and to their readers who helped to improve the book.

This book was begun during a research trip to Oxford enabled by the South African National Research Foundation, and substantially completed in time paid for by the Research Office of the University of Cape Town in the form of a teaching replacement grant for the second half of the teaching year 2006. Grateful thanks to the NRF's Thuthuka Programme and to Haajirah Esau, and to Joe Muller, respectively.

Sections of Chapters 1, 2 and 5, and the conclusion of this book have been adapted from the following articles:

'There was a woman known to be so bold': gender in Petrarchism. South African Journal of Medieval and Renaissance Studies 16 (2006).

'Petrarch's long-deceased woes?': Petrarchism and hip hop. Scrutiny 2 11 (1) (2006): 46–64.

'Another Story: The (Im)Possibility of Lesbian Desire'. Agenda 63 (2005): 44–57.
