Acknowledgements

This book was written with the encouragement and support of a number of colleagues, friends and institutions. Acknowledgement should go to the British Film Institute Library Reading Room, London, and the librarians there for their helpful assistance and advice in obtaining archive film material and publicity. Thanks also to librarian Robin Stinson at the University of East London. My warmest thanks to my friend and colleague Dr Caroline Bainbridge for her unqualified enthusiasm and generosity regarding the writing of this book and for her insightful comments on draft chapters. My thanks also to Professor Shelley Day Sclater for her helpful comments on earlier draft chapters, and to my Psychosocial Studies colleagues and students at The University of East London who have supported my work on this book with enthusiasm – and Dr Heather Price and Dr David Jones deserve special thanks here. I also want to thank Professor Barry Richards, Dr Corinne Squire, Dr Amal Treacher and Dr Susannah Radstone, who were involved in the earlier stages of my research into masculine jealousy and cinema.

I would like to express gratitude to Penny Simmons at Password Publishing for her advice and support in the formatting and copy editing of the manuscript and to Jill Lake and Melanie Blair at Palgrave Macmillan for their support in the development of the book. My thanks to Nicholas Wolfson for his generosity in allowing me to reproduce his painting 'Jealousy' (1973) on the cover of this book see: (www.nicholaswolfson.com).

The following parts have been published elsewhere: a modified version of Chapter 7 has been published in the Journal For Cultural Research, 10(3), July 2006, pp. 219–235, and some parts of Chapter 2 were published in a modified form in Psychoanalytic Studies, 2(1), 2000, pp. 77–88.

I want to thank my family for their support in getting the book written, and last but not least, its completion owes much to the warm encouragement, love and support of Lindsay Wells.
