Acknowledgements

I would like to thank Scott McCracken, for his very helpful comments on the first draft of the last chapter; Michael Worboys, for help with the history of syphilis; Mary and Derek Grover; my father, for supplying Mozart books and taking me to Lourdes; the anonymous reader for Palgrave; Karin Brown, for kindly photocopying for me the phrenological report on Henry Irving; the interlibrary loan staff at the Mary Badland Library, Sheffield Hallam University, who have as always gone well beyond the call of duty; and my colleagues at Sheffield Hallam for being, also as always, models of collegiality. Andy Smith and Bill Hughes have been helpful in all things Stokerian for a long time now, and Chris and Sam make everything possible. This book is for Mike, who should have been here to read it.

An earlier version of a small part of Chapter 1 appeared as 'Vampires and Snakes: Monstrosity and Motherhood in Bram Stoker', Irish Studies Review 19 (summer 1997), 5–8.
