Acknowledgements

This book began life as a doctoral thesis. I am indebted to Ted Benton, my supervisor, for his consistent support, sensitive interventions and guidance, especially at those critical points when the project was becoming overwhelming and the direction ahead unclear. I would also like to thank Ian Craib, University of Essex, and Peter Dickens, University of Sussex, for their comments and discussion. My colleagues at the University of Hertfordshire are owed much gratitude: Derrick Dale for his unstinting support for my attending the doctorate programme at Essex; colleagues who commented on several seminar presentations based on what eventually became this book; and Agnes Michel for updating material in Chapter 1. Lastly, I would like to thank Ann, Matthew and Thomas who had to endure my mental absenteeism from our home for long periods of time. I owe them a big apology for this and as small recompense dedicate the book to them.
