The Palgrave Studies in Cultural and Intellectual History series has three primary aims: to close divides between intellectual and cultural approaches, thus bringing them into mutually enriching interactions; to encourage interdisciplinarity in intellectual and cultural history; and to globalize the field, both in geographical scope and in subjects and methods. This series is open to work on a range of modes of intellectual inquiry, including social theory and the social sciences; the natural sciences; economic thought; literature; religion; gender and sexuality; philosophy; political and legal thought; psychology; and music and the arts. It encompasses not just North America but Africa, Asia, Eurasia, Europe, Latin America, and the Middle East. It includes both nationally focused studies and studies of intellectual and cultural exchanges between different nations and regions of the world, and encompasses research monographs, synthetic studies, edited collections, and broad works of reinterpretation. Regardless of methodology or geography, all books in the series are historical in the fundamental sense of undertaking rigorous contextual analysis.

Acknowledgments

In writing this book, I have benefited from the feedback, suggestions, and support of a great many friends and colleagues. I would like to thank April Shelford, Matt Matsuda, and Jeremy Popkin for their useful feedback on different parts of this project, and Ray Jonas, Tom Kselman, Michael Wilson, and John Warne Monroe for their continuing support and encouragement. At New College of Florida, I have been fortunate to have had wonderful colleagues—particularly Carrie Benes, Bob Johnson, Thomas McCarthy, and David Rohrbacher—who have helped to create a pleasant and intellectually stimulating work environment. At Palgrave Macmillan, Chris Chappell and Sarah Whalen have helped in many ways, both large and small, to bring this book project to fruition, while series editor Anthony LaVopa and the two anonymous reviewers all offered useful feedback, which has made the final product that much stronger. As always, any remaining weaknesses are my own.

Throughout the writing of this book, New College of Florida provided me with summer research support, including a travel grant for a visit to the Bibliothèque Nationale de France (BNF) in summer 2007, and a sabbatical in fall 2010 that allowed me to complete the first draft of the manuscript. I would especially like to thank Gordon Bauer, my predecessor as chair of the Division of Social Sciences at New College, for extending his term of administrative service for an additional semester to allow me to take my scheduled sabbatical. The American Philosophical Society graciously awarded me a Franklin Research Grant in summer 2010, which allowed me to make a second research trip to France, this time to the Archives Nationales d'Outre-Mer (ANOM) in Aix-en-Provence. The archivists and staff at both the BNF and the ANOM were invariably professional and prompt in providing me with the books, microfilms, and archival cartons I needed to complete this project.

Conducting research at a small liberal arts college located far from major research collections presents unique challenges, and so I would like to make two additional acknowledgments. The interlibrary loan staff at Jane Bancroft Cook Library in Sarasota, particularly Barbara Dubreuil and Ed Foster, were invariably helpful and courteous, promptly and cheerfully processing literally hundreds of requests for loan materials over the six years I have worked on this project. Second, though we have never met and they have no idea how much they have helped me, I would like to thank everyone affiliated with the Gallica digitalization project at the BNF, which has made over a million books, periodicals, and images available online for free download. Technological advances and institutional leadership have made possible an unprecedented démocratisation du savoir, which I am sure would have pleased the eighteenth-century Republic of Letters.

Parts of chapter 3 were previously published in “The Noble Savage and the Savage Noble: Philosophy and Ethnography in the Voyages of the Baron de Lahontan” (French Colonial History 11 (2010), 161–191), and “Living Antiquity: Lafitau’s Moeurs des sauvages américains and the Religious Roots of the Enlightenment Science of Man” (Proceedings of the Western Society for French History 36 (2008), 75–92). I am grateful to the publishers of both journals for allowing me to reproduce material from these articles in the present volume.

Most of all, I would like to thank my family, particularly my wife Alicia and son Victor James, for their constant love and support. This book is dedicated to them.
