Acknowledgements

Like the companion volume in this series, British Historical Facts, 1830–1900, the compilation of this book owes a very large debt to the pioneering efforts of David Butler, whose British Political Facts 1900–1975 provided both the original idea and model for this latest volume. Much work for this book was undertaken at Nuffield College, Oxford. Both authors would like to record their thanks to the Warden and Fellows of the College for making its facilities so readily available.

Inevitably, for a reference work on a period as far back as 1760 to 1830, there is a difference in emphasis in this volume compared to its companions in the series. Diplomatic and military affairs occupy more space. There are details on the peerage and orders of knighthood that would be inappropriate in later volumes. Inevitably, party politics and electoral statistics cannot be as fully treated, but riots, public order and political reform come to the fore.

No volume of this type can ever hope to be definitive. The editors hope, however, that they have gathered together as many of the most useful facts and figures as can be included within the confines of a medium-sized reference work. Suggestions for additional material to be included in subsequent editions of this book will be welcomed.

Several people have contributed to the compilation of this book. The chapter on the armed forces was compiled by Stephen Brooks. Alan Gilbert and Anthony Bax provided much of the material for the chapter on religion. Jackie Johns gave valued advice on early trade unionism. Amongst others whom we would like to thank are Sheila Fairfield, Philip Riden and Philip Woods.

Finally, a very special debt is due to two people. John Brooke has encouraged the compilation of this book from the outset. His advice and guidance have been greatly appreciated. John Sainty, whose own definitive work on office-holders constitutes a towering achievement of scholarship, has generously given of his time to guide the authors from some, at least, of the pitfalls of compiling a work of reference for this period.
