Acknowledgements

This book could not have been written without the advice and encouragement of Dick Bryan. I would also like to thank Evan Jones for being an excellent guide to the literature on postwar policymaking, Stuart Rosewarne and Frank Stilwell.

I have benefited enormously from comments on the manuscript by John King, Jan Toporowski and Geoff Harcourt. Chapter 4 is based on a paper forthcoming in Australian Economic History Review. I would like to thank the anonymous reviewers for their comments, and the publisher, Wiley, for permission to use it here.

I would like to thank Roni Demirbag, Luke Deer, Sam Russell, Chris Jefferis, Sharni Chan, Tom Barnes, Joy Paton, Natasha Cortis and Danielle Spruyt for their academic and social support.

I would never have started the project without the help and endless encouragement of my wife, Raych Green. I would have also never finished it if she hadn't gently hinted that it was about time to, and been generally wonderful during the last few months of putting it together. Finally, thanks to my daughter Frankie just for being around.

Note on Pre-decimal Currency

Throughout this book I have followed the regular practice of the Reserve Bank of Australia's historical statistics in converting pre-decimal prices into dollars at the 1966 conversion rate of £1 = $2.
