Palgrave Shakespeare Studies takes Shakespeare as its focus but strives to understand the significance of his oeuvre in relation to his contemporaries, subsequent writers and historical and political contexts. By extending the scope of Shakespeare and English Renaissance Studies the series will open up the field to examinations of previously neglected aspects or sources in the period's art and thought. Titles in the Palgrave Shakespeare Studies series seek to understand anew both where the literary achievements of the English Renaissance came from and where they have brought us.

Acknowledgements

First and always my thanks are to Innes Wilson, whose support through the whole of the life of this book was instrumental in making it possible.

As supervisors of postgraduate work that became the nucleus of this book, my gratitude to John Golder and Richard Madeleine at the University of NSW, and Dennis Kennedy at Trinity College Dublin. Others who gave me great assistance with developing the details include Penny Gay, Amanda Piesse, Nicholas Greene and David Carnegie.

I am deeply grateful to the artists who agreed to share their experiences of these plays and these characters with me, including the directors John Bell, Lori Leigh, Yvonne Brewster, Madeleine Blackwell and the late Nick Enright, and the actors Natalie Radmall-Quirke, Paula Arundell, Sophie Hambleton, Susan Lyons and Blazey Best, who has played no fewer than three of the women in this book.

More broadly I must thank many theatre companies and their associates for access to their archives: the Shakespeare Birthplace Trust, Shakespeare's Globe, National Theatre, and the V&A Theatre Collections at the Victoria and Albert Museum. My particular thanks to the Melbourne Theatre Company, the Bell Shakespeare Company, Northern Broadsides and the London Bubble, who all had staff who went to considerable trouble to hunt out and send me the material I asked for.

The illustrations were made possible through the kind permission of the following photographers and theatre companies: Malcolm Davies for the image of Tamsin Greig as Constance for the RSC; John Haynes for Nancy Carroll as Lady Percy for the RSC and Saskia Reeves as Beatrice for Cheek by Jowl; Michal Daniel for the image of Jan Leslie Harding as Joan of Arc in the New York Public Theater production of Henry VI Part 1: The Edged Sword; Tania Kelley for Marta Dusseldorp as Queen Margaret in the Sydney Theatre Company production of Wars of the Roses; Heidrun Lohr for the image of Blazey Best as Adriana, for the Bell Shakespeare Company; Patrick Redmond for Pauline McLynn as Katherina for Rough Magic; Donald Cooper for Patricia Kerrigan as Goneril at Shakespeare's Globe; Nobby Clark for Maeve Larkin as Emilia for Northern Broadsides; Jeff Busby for Paula Arundell as Isabella for the Melbourne Theatre Company; Steve Hickey for Polly Naylor as Marina in the London Bubble production; Catherine Ashmore for Deborah Findlay as Paulina at the National Theatre.

This work has drawn upon material from within 'Writing about Motive: Isabella, the Duke and Moral Authority' and 'Daunted by a Woman's Sight?: The Use and Abuse of Female Presence in the Histories Performed as Cycles', which appeared in Shakespeare Survey 58 and 63 respectively (Cambridge University Press, 2005 and 2010), edited by Peter Holland. My thanks for their permission to use these portions; and also from 'The Winter's Tale, the Female Voice and the Modern Stage', a paper given at the 2008 British Graduate Shakespeare Conference.

I must also thank the editors of this series, Michael Dobson and Dymphna Callaghan, and the others at Palgrave Macmillan who have supported this project. In addition, people who have helped me with editing, ideas and feedback include Jasmine Kamaralli, Elliot Moriarty, Tom Donegan, Roslyn Oades, Kylie Silvester, Maeve Hegarty, Michaela Alex, Marina De Gabriele and Viv Smythe and the blogging community at Hoyden About Town. My gratitude to all of them, in particular all the noisy women who made me see a book like this as not just possible but necessary.
