Following on the sustained success of the acclaimed European Union Series, which essentially publishes research-based textbooks, Palgrave Studies in European Union Politics publishes cutting edge research-driven monographs.

The remit of the series is broadly defined, both in terms of subject and academic discipline. All topics of significance concerning the nature and operation of the European Union potentially fall within the scope of the series. The series is multidisciplinary to reflect the growing importance of the EU as a political, economic and social phenomenon.

Contributors

Magnus Blomgren is Associate Professor in Political Science at Umeå University, Sweden. His research interest relates to various aspects of democracy, more particularly, the effect of the European integration on national political systems. This involves the development of political parties, parliamentarism and legislative representation. He has recently co-edited Parliamentary Roles in Modern Legislatures (2012) and co-authored Political Parties in Multi-Level Politics (2013).

Angela Bourne is Associate Professor in the Department of Society and Globalization at Roskilde University, Denmark. Her current research interests include democratic responses to political extremism in Europe, including processes, justifications and consequences of banning political parties. Her previous research examined the relationship between EU politics and devolution in member states, particularly in Spain and the Basque Country. Her publications include The European Union and the Accommodation of Basque Difference in Spain (2008) and two edited collections, The EU and Territorial Politics Within Member States: Conflict or Co-operation? (2004) and European Union Studies (with M. Cini, 2006). She has also published in the Journal of Common Market Studies; Journal of Comparative Law; Democratization; Regional and Federal Studies; Perspectives on European Politics and Society; and International Journal of Iberian Studies.

Sevasti Chatzopoulou is Associate Professor in EU Politics and Policies at the Department of Society and Globalisation, Roskilde University, Denmark. Her research interests focus on the Europeanisation of national public administrations and regulatory policies and the role of the EU as a regulatory global actor, especially in relation to the US. She had published in the International Journal of Public Administration and Perspectives on European Politics and Society. Currently she is working on a monograph on the Europeanisation of national administrations.

Laura Cram is Professor of European Politics at the University of Edinburgh, UK. Her research tackles key questions about the changing parameters of European integration such as how EU policies and institutions impact on public engagement with the EU, and how daily reminders of EU membership condition public attitudes to the EU and EU policy process. Her specialities include EU identity and the neopolitics of identity, physiology, EU social policy, the European Commission, civil society in the EU and the impact of the EU treaties on Scotland. Her articles have been published in the Journal of Common Market Studies, Journal of European Public Policy, Governance and Nations and Nationalism.

Amandine Crespy is Assistant Professor in Political Science and EU Studies at the Université Libre de Bruxelles (ULB; Centre d'étude de la vie politique-Institute for European Studies), Belgium. She holds a PhD from the ULB and was a visiting fellow at the Freie Universität Berlin, Sciences Po in Paris and Harvard University. Her research mainly deals with political conflicts related to the economic and social dimension of EU integration. She has conducted research on Euroscepticism and resistances to EU integration, public services liberalisation and regulation, the politics of the Eurocrisis and the role of conflict and discourse in European democracy. She is the author of Qui a peur de Bolkestein? Conflit, résistances et démocratie dans l'Union européenne (2012), and her articles have appeared in the Journal of Common Market Studies, Journal of European Public Policy and Political Studies.

Theofanis Exadaktylos is Lecturer in European Politics at the School of Politics, University of Surrey, UK. His research interests revolve around the Europeanisation of the national foreign policies of the EU member-states with particular focus on Greece and Germany, issues of real and nominal convergence in the least affluent countries of the union, the political economy of transition and enlargement, policy implementation and political trust, and the current Eurozone crisis from the perspective of the rise in populism. His articles have appeared in the Journal of Common Market Studies. He is the co-editor (with C. Radaelli) of Research Design in European Studies: Establishing Causality in Europeanization (2012).

Sara Hagemann is Lecturer in EU Politics at the London School of Economics and Political Science, UK, where she joined the European Institute in September 2009. Her research interests include EU politics and governance, EU treaty reforms and enlargements, and transparency and accountability in representative democracies. She has published in European Union Politics, Journal of Common Market Studies and Journal of European Public Policy.

Ann-Christina L. Knudsen is Associate Professor in the Department of Culture and Society at Aarhus University, Denmark. Her research interests are concerned with the history of European integration, the development of transnational political elites and the Common Agricultural Policy. Her publications include Living Political Biography: Narrating 20th Century European Lives (with K. Gram-Skjoldager, 2012), Farmers on Welfare: The Making of Europe's Common Agricultural Policy (2009) and articles in the Journal of European Integration History and Cultures & Conflicts.

Annica Kronsell is Professor in the Department of Political Science at Lund University, Sweden. Her research interest concerns environmental and climate politics, and the politics of sustainable development in a Swedish, European and global context as well as in gender studies, with a particularly focus on security and defence. Her most recent books are Gender, Sex and the Postnational Defence: Militarism and Peacekeeping (2012) and Making Gender, Making War: Violence, Military and Peacekeeping Practices (co-edited with E. Svedberg, 2012).

Jenny M. Lewis is Professor at the University of Melbourne, Australia, where she holds an Australian Research Council Future Fellowship. Her research revolves around performance measurement and its consequences, comparative public policy and public administration, research policy, policy processes and power, street level bureaucracy and innovation capacity in public services. She has published numerous journal articles on these issues and her most recent books include Connecting and Cooperating: Social Capital and Public Policy (2010), Networks, Innovation and Public Policy: Politicians, Bureaucrats and the Pathways to Change Inside Government (with M. Considine and D. Alexander, 2009) and Academic Governance: Disciplines and Policy (forthcoming).

Karl Löfgren is Associate Professor in the School of Government at Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. His research interests revolve around electronic government with a special emphasis on policy aspects, surveillance and data protection policy, new media and democracy, governance and policy implementation and new forms of local democracy. He is the author, co-author or editor of five books and has published in the International Journal of Public Administration, European Political Science, Local Government Studies, Planning Theory and Public Policy and Administration.

Kennet Lynggaard is Associate Professor in EU Studies at the Department of Society and Globalisation, Roskilde University, Denmark. His research interests are focused on EU governance, research design in EU studies, Europeanisation, European integration and globalisation, and, most recently, symbols and myths in European integration. He is the author, co-author or editor of four books, and he is currently working on Discourse Analysis in European Union Politics (forthcoming). He has published in the Journal of European Public Policy, West European Politics, New Political Economy, Comparative European Politics, Journal of European Integration and Sociologia Ruralis.

Martino Maggetti is Lecturer at the Institut für Politikwissenschaft, University of Zürich, Switzerland and Senior Researcher at the Institut d'Etudes Politiques et Internationales, University of Lausanne, Switzerland. His research interests are mainly oriented towards the fields of public policy, comparative politics, public administration and regulatory governance, with a special focus on regulatory reforms, the regulatory state and transnational private regulation, the study of independent regulatory agencies and other public sector organisations, interactive governance and network governance, policy diffusion, social network analysis and research design and comparative methods.

Ian Manners is Professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Copenhagen, Denmark. His research interests lie at the intersections of the critical social theory and the study of the EU in global politics, including the EU's normative power in global politics, symbols and myths in European integration, global environmental governance and global public governance. He is author or editor of six books, most recently The Foreign Policies of European Union Member States (2013) and The European Project: Politics and Law: History and Future (2013). He is also the author of over 20 articles in journals including the Journal of Common Market Studies and Journal of European Public Policy.

Julie Hassing Nielsen is Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Copenhagen, Denmark. Her research interests focus on two separate strands of EU studies and the EU democratic deficit. First, she explores political psychology and experimentation as a tool to provide new insights into the EU democratic deficit discussions. Second, she focuses on how the Eurozone crisis from 2008 onwards has challenged and changed the notion of democracy at the EU level. She obtained her PhD from the European University Institute in Florence in 2012. Prior to coming to the University of Copenhagen, she was a visiting researcher at New York University and at the Danish Institute for International Studies. She has authored and co-authored several publications on EU legitimacy and the EU democratic deficit, including a co-authored book about EU affairs.

Stratos Patrikios is Lecturer in the School of Government and Public Policy at the University of Strathclyde, UK. His research interests include political behaviour, social identities and religion and politics. He has published in peer-reviewed journals such as the Journal of Peace Research, Political Behavior, Electoral Studies and Parliamentary Affairs.

Sebastiaan Princen is Professor of Governance and Policymaking in the EU at Utrecht University's School of Governance, the Netherlands. His research focuses on issues of international and European governance, more specifically policy making in the EU. In recent years he has published extensively on processes of agenda setting in the EU. In addition, he has participated in studies on the Europeanisation of the Dutch civil service and the role of interest groups in the EU. Recent books include The Politics of the European Union (with H. Lelieveldt, 2011) and Agenda-Setting in the European Union (2009).

Claudio M. Radaelli is Professor of Political Science and Director of the Centre for European Governance at the University of Exeter, UK. He has published extensively within the fields of policy learning, regulatory analysis and EU public policy, and has carried out several research projects on Europeanisation, international taxation, discourse and the politics of expertise, and regulatory impact assessment in a comparative perspective. His most recent books include Research Design in European Studies Establishing Causality in Europeanization (with T. Exadaktylos, 2012) and Designing Research in the Social Sciences (with M. Maggetti and F. Gilardi, 2012). He is also the co-editor of the European Journal of Political Research.

Ben Rosamond is Professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Copenhagen, Denmark. He has published extensively on the political economy of the EU, including the role of ideas, discourses and knowledge in European integration, EU governance and globalisation and comparative regional integration. Publications include New Regionalism and the European Union: Dialogues, Comparisons and New Research Directions (edited with A. Warleigh-Lack and N. Robinson, 2012), Handbook of European Union Politics (edited with K.E. Jørgensen and M.A. Pollack, 2007) and Theories of European Integration (2000). He is also the co-editor of Comparative European Politics.

Michael Strange is Senior Lecturer in Global Political Studies at the Department of Global Political Studies, Malmö University, Sweden. He was trained in the Department of Government at the University of Essex where he received a master's with distinction in international relations and a PhD in ideology and discourse analysis. He is the author of Writing Global Trade Governance (2013). He has published widely in journals such as Alternatives: Local, Global, Political, Journal of Media, Communication & Society and Geopolitics. He is currently engaged in a funded research project on the politics and regulatory regime surrounding undocumented child migrants.

Alex Warleigh-Lack is Professor of EU Politics and Executive Director of the Centre for Research on the European Matrix (CRonEM) in the School of Politics at the University of Surrey, UK. His research revolves around three main interests: the politics of European integration, with particular regard to legitimacy and institutional reform; comparative regional integration, particularly regarding the EU, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation and the North American Free Trade Agreement; and green politics, in particular the application of green theory to regional integration. The author of more than 20 journal articles, his books include European Studies and the New Regionalisms: Comparisons, Dialogues and New Research Directions (with N. Robinson and B. Rosamond, 2011) and European Union: The Basics (2008).
