Acknowledgments

Writing this book has taken me down a long, winding road. I began soon after graduating from the PhD Program in Theatre at the CUNY Graduate Center. Many people pass through its pages directly and indirectly. My roots at the CUNY Graduate Center continue to nourish any path I'm on. First, I must thank Judith Milhous, Daniel Gerould, Marvin Carlson, and Jean Graham-Jones for their vitality, wit, encouragement, and advice, which accompany all my endeavors.

Without the institutional support I have received, the wide-ranging research necessary could not have been accomplished. Three Performing Arts Research Grants from PSC-CUNY between 2008 and 2012 allowed me to travel and complete sections of the manuscript. Two Whiting mini-Grants from 2009 to 2011 also provided timely research support. I thank the Office of the Provost and Dean Jeffrey Peck of the Weissman School of Arts and Sciences at Baruch College for travel funding to numerous conferences while I was working on chapters. In addition, this study benefits from research assistance provided by the Baruch Honors Program and its Director Nancy Aries.

I extend warm thanks to David Savran and James Wilson, co-editors of The Journal of American Drama and Theatre, for allowing me to reprint an article on Imre Kiralfy, which forms part of chapter 3. Numerous research collections, curators, and librarians have aided me with illustrative materials and documents. I'm indebted to Jason Jurgena from the US Department of the Interior Museum. Thanks to AnnaLee Pauls and Charles Greene at Princeton University Library for their gracious assistance. I also want to express my appreciation to the Minnesota Historical Society, Cornell University Library, Yale University's Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library, History Colorado, and the Smithsonian American Art Museum.

Palgrave Macmillan's continued interest since the early stages of the manuscript has been a constant source of encouragement. My gratitude to this commitment runs deep. Special thanks to associate editor Robyn Curtis for steering me through. I also thank editorial assistant Erica Buchman for all her help. My appreciation extends to the indispensable Daniel Gundlach for preparing the index. Through many revisions reshaping the manuscript, the perceptive feedback from blind readers has enriched the whole. Their considerable attention, critical insights, and specific recommendations are most appreciated. Remaining flaws are mine.

I'm fortunate for friends and colleagues that have given me unstinting advice and clarity. Barbara Lewis emboldened my thinking overall, especially on panoramic space. Mimi D'Aponte sharpened some of my ideas on the theme. Conversations with Marla Carlson, Rose Malague, and Bruce Kirle provoked me forward. I can't forget Jill Dolan's generous counsel. My wonderful colleagues in the Fine and Performing Arts Department and across Baruch College sustained me through every phase. I'm thankful for the enthusiastic and steady guidance from colleagues Terry Berkowitz, Karen Shelby, and Katherine Behar. Office Manger Skip Dietrich's nimble assistance is deeply appreciated. Jana O'Keefe Bazzoni, Paula Berggren, and Suzanne Epstein, I thank for their foresight.

Walking every step of the way with me is my family. Loving thanks to Patti and Joe Hewitt, Geraldine Tenneriello, and Sara and Brian Darby for keeping me grounded, patiently enduring my neglect, giving me unconditional support, and making me pasta. Understanding and humor make me grateful for friends Elise Engler, Leslie Atherholt, Manolo Tejeda, Donna Mitchell, Laura Kidder, and Roz Koenen. All my love to Peter Golfinopoulos, the beacon in my life.
